THE SCHOLEMASTER.

INTRODUCTION.

T is a part of the Divine Providence of the World, that the Strong shall influence the Weak: not only on the Battlefield and in Diplomacy; but also in Learning and Literature. Thus the Nations of Modern Europe have been influenced by the Writings of Greece and Rome: and they have influenced each other, in turn, with their own Power and Beauty in Thought and Expresturn, with their own Power and Beauty in Thought and Expression. Thus, Modern English has been subject in succession to the influence of Classical Literature in the time of Ascham; to the literary fascination of Italy, in the age of Elizabeth; of France, at the Restoration; and of Germany, in more recent times: without at all ceasing in the natural progression of its innate capabilities, for all the fashions and forms which, for a time, it pleased to adopt. In like manner, English Literature has allured the German, the Frenchman, and the Italian: thereby restoring benefit for benefit in the commerce and free trade of the Mind.

2. The stream of Ancient Literature and Cultivation, which, after the fall of Constantinople, advanced from East to West; at length reached our shores in the reign of Henry the Eight. In the planting and engraftment of Classical learning in England at that time, St. John's College, Cambridge, —founded on 9th April 1571.—had a most distinguished share. Its Master and Fellows—whether they adhered to the older or the newer 'faith'—strove alike most earnestly to promote the new 'learning.'

Thomas Nashe, writing—twenty years after Ascham's death—somewhat severely on 'our triuiall translators,' in his address To the Gentlemen Students, prefixed to R. Greene's Menaphon, 1589: bears honourable testimony to the worthiness of this College. . . . "I will propound to your learned imitation, those men of import, that haue laboured with credit in this laudable kinde of Translation; In the forefront of whom, I cannot but place that aged Father Erasmus, that inuested most of our Greeke Writers, in the roabes of the auncient Romaines; in whose traces, Philip Melancthon, Sadolet, Plantine, and manie other reverent Germaines insisting, have reedified the ruines of our decayed Libraries, and merueilouslie inriched the Latine tongue with the expence of their toyle. Not long after, their emulation beeing transported into England, everie private Scholler, William Turner, and who not, beganne to vaunt the smattering of Latine, in English Impressions. But amongst others in that age, Sir Thomas Moore with his Comicall wit, at that instant was not altogether idle: yet was not Knowledge fullie confirmed in hir Monarchie amongst vs, till that most famous and fortunate Nurse of all learning, Saint Johns in Cambridge, that at that time was as an Vniversitie within it selfe; shining so farre above all other Houses, Halls, and Hospitalls whatsoever, that no Colledge in the Towne, was able to compare with the tythe of her Students; having (as I have hearde grave men of credite report) more candles light in it, everie Winter Morning before fowre of the clocke, than the fowre of clocke bell gave stroakes; till Shee (I saie) as a pittying Mother, put too her helping hande, and sent from her fruitfull wombe, sufficient Schollers, both to support her owne weale, as also to supplie all other inferiour foundations defects, and namelie that royall erection of Trinitie Colledge, which the Vniversitie Orator, in an Epistle to the Duke of Somerset, aptlie tearmed Colonia diducta from the Suburbes of Saint Iohns. In which extraordinarie repurged the errors of Artes, expelde from their puritie, and set before our eyes, a more perfect Methode of Studie. 245982 3. Thomas Bakerin his History of the College of St. John the Evangelist, Ed. by J. E. B., Mayor, 1869; tells us that about 1520-30, "12d per week was allowed in commons to a fellow, and only 7d to a scholar. These were times when £120 was sufficient to found a fellowship [for the private foundations usually run thereabouts], and when £6 per an. was enough to maintain a fellow," $\textit{p}$. $\text{81}$, "as £3 per annum was enough to found a scholar," $\text{p}$. 99. Baker also gives us a Statement of the finances of the College when Doctor Metcalfe became its third master, about Dec. 1518, which fully corroborates Ascham's account at $\text{p}$. 133: which Statement may be thus summarized:—

Total revenues from lands

Less value of private foundations

Less the ordinary charges incident to these revenues

Remaining to the sustentation of all such as be to be found of the said lands, i.e., for their only commons, stipend, and livery yearly.

The charges of these viz. of the master, twenty-eight fellows, six scholars and of several servants, is yearly.

Excess of Outgoings over Receipts

£101 3

Yet Doctor Metcalfe in ways like those described by Ascham, as well as by obtaining the property of the suppressed Nunneries of Higham and Bromehall, raised the finances of the College to a flourishing condition, until it was spending £1000 a year (equal to £15,000 now) in the spread of knowledge.

4. But the College was not more fortunate in wealth than in learning when, in 1530, Roger Ascham, a Yorkshire lad of 15, entered it. John Cheke had been elected Fellow on the 30th of March in that year: and John Redman became a fellow on 3d of November following. Ascham thus distinctly attributes the race of Scholars that were bred up in St. John's College to the unwearying efforts of these two men. "At Cambrige also, in S. Johns Colledge, in my tyme, I do know, that, not so much the good statutes, as two lentlemen, of worthie memorie, Syr Iohn Cheke, and Doctour Readman, by their onely example of excellency in learnyng, of good order in all thyng, did breed vp so many learned men in that one College of S. Iohns, at one time, as I beleue, the whole Vniuersitie of Louaine, in many yeares was neuer able to affourd," p. 67.

uersitie of Louaine, in many yeares was neuer able to affourd," p. 67.

As Redman became Master of King's College in 1542, and Cheke went to Court on 10 July 1544 to be Tutor to Prince Edward; the period of Study to which Ascham so gladly and so often reverts in this his last work, 'my swete tyme spent at Cambridge,' would not exceed fifteen years, at the longest; so far at least as the time during which Cheke and Redman gave so mighty an impulse to classical Learning.

5. These Planters of the ancient Literature in England hoped well of their Mother Tongue. The more they learnt of the subtilty of Greek eloquence or the cunning elegance of Roman prose: the more they desired that English might be kept pure, the more they believed it to be capable of a worthy literature.

ROGER ASCHAM while a Fellow of St. John's, deliberately wrote his Toxophilus, published in 1545, in plain and pure English; thus, how strangely to us, defends himself. "If any man woulde blame me, eyther for takynge such a matter in hande, or els for writing it in the Englyshe tongue, this answere I may make hym, that whan the beste of the realme thinke it honest for them to vse, I one of the meanest sorte, ought not to suppose it vile for me to write: And though to haue written it in an other tonge, had bene bothe more profitable for my study, and also more honest for my name, yet I can thinke my lazour wel bestowed, yf with a little hynderaunce of my profyt and name, may'e come any fourtheraunce, to the pleasure or commoditie, of the gentlemen and yeomen of Englande, for whose sake I tooke this matter in bande. And as for ye Latin or greke tonge, every thing is so excellently done in them. that none can do better: In the Englysh tonge contrary, euery thinge in a maner so meanly, bothe for the matter and handelynge, that no man can do For therein the least learned for the moste parte, haue ben alwayes moost redye to wryte. And they whiche had leaste hope in latin, haue bene moste boulde in englyshe: when surelye euery man that is moste ready to taulke, is not moost able to wryte. He that wyll wryte well in any tongue, muste folowe thys councel of Aristotle, to speake as the common people do, to thinke as wise men do; and so shoulde euery man vinderstande hym, and the iudgement of wyse men alowe him. Many English writers haue not done so, but vsing straunge wordes as latin, french and Italian, do make all thinges darke and harde, "$\nu$. 18. Ed. 1868.

Thomas Hoby, afterwards knighted, having, after many delays, finished his translation of Baldassare Castiglione's work, spoken of so highly by Ascham at 5, 66: in his Epistle, has the following. "As I therefore have to my smal skil bestowed some labour about this piece of woorke, euen so coulde I wishe with al my hart, profounde learned men in the Greeke and Latin shoulde make the lyke proofe, and euerye manne store the tunge accordinge to hys knowledge and delite aboue other men, in some piece of learnynge, that we alone of the worlde may not bee styll counted barbarous in oure tunge, as in time out of minde we have bene in our maners. And so shall we perchaunce in time become as famous in Englande, as the learned men of other nations

haue ben and presently are.'

While the work was yet in MS., Hoby sent it to Sir John Cheke to look over. Cheke wrote the following letter in reply; which is important as coming from one who, Sir T. Wilson says, had 'better skill in our English speache to judge of the Phrases and properties of wordes and to divide sentences: than any one else had that I have knowne.' It is also interesting as tences: than any one else had that I haue knowne.' It is also interesting as showing that uniform spelling had nothing to do with clean English. This letter was written while Sir John was fading out of life; for shame at his recantation of the Protestant faith at his pardon, for having acted—out of zeal for that faith—as Secretary of State to Lady Jane Grey. He died in the Sept. following of that year, 1557, at the house of his friend Peter Osborne, in Woodstreet. The letter is printed verbatim at the end of the first edition of The Courtier, 1561.

To his louing frind Mayster Thomas Hoby.

For your opinion of my gud will vnto you as you writ, you can not be deceived: for submitting your doinges to ml iudgement, I thanke you: for taking this pain of your translation, you worthilie deseru great thankes of all sortes. I have taken sum pain at your request cheflie in your preface, not in the reading of it for that was pleasaunt vuto me boath for the roundnes of your saienges and welspeakinges of the saam, but in changing certein wordes which might verie well be let aloan, but that I am verie curious in mi freendes matters, not to determijn, but to debaat what is best. Whearin, I seek not the bestnes haplie bi truth, but bi mijn own phansie, and shew of goodnes.

I am of this opinion that our own tung shold be written cleane and pure, ynmixt and ynmangeled with borowing of other tunges, wherein if we take not heed bi tijm, euer borowing and neuer payeng, she shall be fain to keep her house as bankrupt. For then doth our tung naturallie and praisablie vtter her meaning, when she bouroweth no conterfeitness of other tunges to attire her self withall, but vseth plainlie her own with such shift, as nature craft, experiens, and following of other excellent doth lead her vnto, and if she want at ani tijm (as being vnperfight she must) yet let her borow with suche bashfulnes, that it mai appeer, that if either the mould of our own tung could serue us to fascion a woord of our own, or if the old denisoned wordes could content and ease this neede we wold not boldly venture of vnknowen wordes This I say not for reproof of you, who have scarslie and necessarily vsed whear occasion serueth a strange word so, as it seemeth to grow out of the matter and not to be sought for: but for mijn own defens, who might be counted ouerstraight a deemer of thinges, if I gaue not thys accompt to you, ai freend and wijs, of mi marring this your handwork. But I am called awai, I prai you pardon mi shortnes, the rest of mi salenges should be but praise and exhortacion in this your doinges, which at moar leisor I shold do better. From my house in Woodstreete the 16 of Iuly, 1557.

Yours assured IOAN CHEEK. These three instances may suffice to show the close connection between their study of the ancient Literature and their care over their native speech. Some of these Classical Students were the best Prose Writers of their time: just as the best Poets then, were those who drew their inspiration from Italy. The two literary influences prepared a way, by creating a favourable literary atmosphere, for our Master Writers in Elizabeth's reign, Spenser and Shakespeare: Bacon and Hooker.

6. Of these Classical Pioneers, Sir John Cheke was the chief. His influence on the English Literature of that and the next age has hardly been adequately recognized': partly because his principal work was Oral Teaching: and partly because only three or four of his thirty to forty known writings (many now lost) are in English. Sir Richard Sackville calls him 'the best Master . . . in our tyme,' at p. 21. Ascham quotes him ever and anon in this work as an authority from whom there was hardly any appeal, and in particular, relates at pp. 154-159, with a fresh memory, Cheke's criticism of Sallust, made to him about twenty-five years before. Cheke was a Teacher of Teachers. The influence of simply Oral Teachers rests chiefly in the hearts works. Cheke taught Edward VI.; Sir W. Cecil; W. Bill, 7th Master of St Johns; R. Ascham; Sir T. Wilson; and many more celebrities of that time: and their characters and careers reflect his teaching.

T, afterwards Sir T. WILSON, in his Epistle, dated 10 June 1570, to Sir W. Cecil [It would be an interesting list, if English books were grouped according to their dedicatees: as showing the influence of the Nobility and Gentry on Literature], prefixed to his translation of the Olynthiacs of Demosthenes into English: thus ably conveys to us a conception of the surpassing abilities and character of Sir John Cheke.

"Great is the force of vertue (Right Honorable Counseller) to wynne loue and good will vniuersally, in whose minde soeuer it is perfitely knowne, to have once gotte a dwelling. I speake it for this ende, that being solitarie of late time from my other studies, and musinge on this world, in the middest of my bookes: I did then (as I have oftentimes else done) deepelye thinke of Sir Iohn Cheeke Knyght, that rare learned man, and singular ornament of this lande. And as the remembrance of him was deare vnto me, for his manifolde great gifts and wonderfull vertues : so did I thinke of his most gentle nature and godly disposed minde, to helpe all those with his knowledge and vnderstanding, that any waye made meanes vnto him, and sought his fauour. And to say for my selfe amongest others, I founde him such a friende to me, for communicating the skill and giftes of hys minde, as I cannot but during my life speake reuerentlye of so worthie a man, and honor in my hart the heauenly remembrance of him. And thinking of my being with him in Italie in that famous Vniuersitie of Padua: I did cal to minde his care that he had ouer all the Englishe menthere, to go to their bokes: and how gladly he did reade to me and others, certaine Orations of Demosthenes in Greeke, the interpretation wherof, I and they had then from his mouth. And so remembring the rather this world by the very argument of those actions: I did then seeke out amongest my other writings for the translation of them, and happily finding some, although not all: I was caried streightways (I trust by Godsgood motion) to make certaine of them to be acquainted so nigh as I coulde with our Englishe tongue, aswell for the aptnesse of the matter, and needefull knowledge now at this time to be had: as also for the right notable, and most excellent handling of the same. And here must I saye, confessing mine owne weakenesse and imperfection, that I neuer founde in my life any thing so harde for me to doe.

Maister Cheeke (whome I dare match with any one before named for his knowledge in the Greeke tongue,) having traueyled in Demosthenes as much as any one of them all, and famous for his learning throughout Europe: yet was he neuer so passing in his translations that no exception coulde be made against him. And then what shall I thinke of my selfe, after the naming of manye excellent learned men, but onely submit my doings to the fauour of others, and desire men to beare with my weakenesse. For this must I needes confesse, that I am altogither vnable to doe so in Englishe, as the excellencie of this Orator descrueth in Greeke. And yet the cunning is no lesse, and the prayse as great in my iudgement, to translate any thing excellently into Englishe, as into any other language. And I thinke (although there be many doers) yet scant one is to be found worthie amongst vs, for translating into our Countrie speach. Such a hard thing it is to bring matter out of any one language into another. And perhaps it may be that euen those who take themselves to bee much better learned than I am (as what is he that is not, having any name for learning at all?) will finde it an harder peece of woorke than they thinke, even to make Greeke speake Englishe, if they will make proofe thereof as I have done. Whose labor and trauayle I woulde as gladly see, as they are lyke now to see mine, that such an Orator as this is, might bee so framed to speake our tongue, as none were able to amende him, and that he might be founde to be most like himselfe. The which enterprise if any might have bene moste bolde to have taken vpon him, Sir Iohn Cheeke was the man, of all that euer I knew, or doe yet know in Englande. Such acquaintance had he with this notable Orator, so gladly did he reade him, and so often: that I thinke there was neuer olde Priest more perfite in his Portreise, nor supersticious Monke in our Ladies Psalter as they call it, nor yet good Preacher in the Bible or testament, than this man was in Demosthenes. And great cause moued him so to be, for that be sawe him to be the perfitest Orator that euer wrate for these two thousand yeares almost by past (for so long it is since he was) and also for that he perceyued bim to baue before his eyes in all his Orations the aduauncement of vertue as a thing chiefly to be sought for, togither with the honor and welfare of his countrie. Besides this, maister Cheekes iudgement was great in translating out of one tongue into an other, and better skill be had in our English speach to judge of the Phrases and properties of wordes, and to divide sentences: than any else had that I have knowne. And often he woulde englysbe his matters out of the Latine or Greeke vpon the sodeyne, by looking of the booke onely without reading or construing any thing at all: An vsage right worthie and verie profitable for all men, aswell for the vnderstanding of the booke, as also for the aptnesse of framing the Authors meaning and bettering thereby their judgement, and therewithall perfiting their tongue and vtterance of speach. Moreouer he was moued greatly to like Demosthenes aboue all others, for that he sawe bim so familiarly applying himselfe to the sense and vnderstanding of the common people, that be sticked not to say, that none euer was more fitte to make an English man tell his tale praise worthily in an open bearing, either in Parlament or in Pulpit, or otherwise, than this onely Orator was.

And although your bonour hath no neede of these my doinges, for that the Greeke is so familiar vnto you, and that you also, as well as I, have hearde Sir Iohn Cheeke read the same Orations at other times: yet I thinke for divers causes I shoulde in right present vnto your honour this my traueyle the rather to baue it through your good liking and allowance, to be made common to many. First the sayd Sir Iohn Cheeke (whome I doe often name, for the honour and reuerence due of so worthie a man) was your brother in lawe [Sir W. Cecil's first wife was Cheeke's sister], your deare friende, your good admonisher, and teacher in your yonger yeares, to take that way of vertue, the fruite whereof you do feele and taste to your great ioy at this day, and shall for euer be remembered therefore" . Ed. 1570.

We may not wonder then; if Ascham so affectionately refers to Cheke in this work; as 'that Ientleman of worthie memorie, my dearest frend and teacher of all the poore learning I haue," 1.38.

[We would here add, out of the same Epistle, by way of parenthesis, Wilson's defence of Translations, which was possibly provoked by Ascham's remarks, at 1.27. But such as are grieued with translated bokes, are lyke to them the entire in Manchet are appropriate that feel and the testing flow. them that eating fine Manchet, are angry with others that feede on Cheate breade. And yet God knoweth men would as gladly eate Manchet as they, If they had it. But all can not weare Veluet, or feede with the best, and therefore such are contented for necessities sake to weare our Countrie cloth, and to take themselves to hard fare, that can have no better."]

- 7. We have noticed a few of the influences on Ascham in his earlier life: in order to understand his outlook on the Literature of his day; while—as he was growing from 48 to 53 years of age—he wrote this book. The Italian Influence had come inlike a flood after the publication of Tottel's Miscellany in June 1557. In his rejection of this influence, while he keptup with the classical learning of the time, we judge him to be a Scholar of Henry's time, surviving into the reign of Elizabeth. We do not allude to his Invective against Italianated Englishmen, for which he had doubtless adequate grounds: but to his shunning the airy lightsomeness of Italian poesy, which so much characterizes English Verse for the next forty years. Every one is entitled to a preference in such matters, and Ascham with others. Though he contended for English Iambics, he confessed he never had a "poeticall head." He owned to loving the Italian language next after Greek and Latin: but Fiction and Rhyme he could not abide. So we realize him as the strong plain Englishman of Henry's day, with his love for all field sports and for cock-fighting, his warm generous heart, his tolerant spirit, his thorough scholarship, his beautiful penmanship: a man to be loved and honoured.
- 8. Ascham's special craft was teaching the young, Latin and Greek. He had taught the Queen, as he tells us at \(\ell \), 96; and now read Greek with her, as she desired. Being thus about the Court, and the Court resting at Windsor on the 10th Dec. 1563; the officers in attendance dined together under the presidency of the Secretary of State. Of the Table Talk on that occasion and its results: Ascham's own account is the best: and need not be repeated here.

9. Looking within the book; we see that begun in December 1563, it was prosecuted off and on for two years and a half, until Sir Richard Sackrille's death in July 1566. It was then, for sorrow's sake, flung aside. 'Almost two yeares togither, this booke lay scattered, and neglected,' and then finished, so far as we now possess it, by the encouragement of Cecil, in the last six or eight months of Ascham's life. Ascham died 30 Dec: 1568.

If a guess might be hazarded: it would seem that the Author had but gathered the materials together, up to Sir Richard Sackville's death: and that he wove them together in their present form, after he resumed the book again. The allusion at $\rho$. 137, to the Queen's visit to Cambridge, in August 1564, as 'late being there,' would show that that part was written about 1565; while the phrase at $\rho$. 71, 'Syr Richard Sackuille, that worthy Ientleman, of worthie memorie, as I sayd in the begynnynge,' would proue that at least The Præface and the Invective against Italianated Englishmen were written after the resumption of the book in 1568; and consequently that it was after then, that the work was finally planned. The first book was then completed, and the second far proceeded with, when Death parted for euer, the busy worker from his Book. This is also confirmed by Ascham's last letter to Sturm: which proves him to have been intent on the work just before his decease.

- 10. Thanks to the editions of Upton and Bennet, The Scholemaster (which, like so many of the books of Elizabeth's time, had been quite forgotten in the previous sixteenth century) has obtained, for a hundred years or more, the reputation of an historic English work of general as well as of professional interest. With it, more than with any other of his works, is Ascham's name usually associated. As Toxophilus was the gift of his manhood towards the cultivation of the Body: so in this work—the legacy almost of his last hours—we inherit his ripest, his most anxious thought upon the Education of the Mlnd and Heart.
- 11. Among that first race of modern learned Englishmen, who fed and carried aloft the Lamp of Knowledge through all those changing and tempestuous times into the peaceful days of Elizabeth: none has become more famous than Roger Ascham: who, taught by the greatest English Teacher of his youth-tide, Sir John Cheeke: In due time became, to his undying delight, the Instructor of the most noble Scholar within the realm:—the Virgin Queen herself.

ROGER ASCHAM'S METHOD OF TEACHING LATIN.

1. That part of The Scholemaster which describes English life and manners of that age, is for us an heritage of authentic Information: his Criticism of Ancient and Contemporary Latin writers, establishes a test of the Classical acumen of his time: but his system of teaching Latin—and mutatis mutandis other languages—deserves our study as a contribution in aid of Education, for all time.

Quick, M.A., London, 1868: 75. 6d, but worthy of being perpetually sold at a shilling as a companion volume to this reprint; inasmuch as it is in some measure a continuation and completion of The Scholemaster. For in these Essays, Mr. unuation and completion of The Scholemaster. For in these Essays, Mr. Quick ably analyses and compares the successive systems of Instruction adopted by The Jesuits, Ascham, Montaigne, Ratich, Milton, Comenius, Locke, Rousseau, Basedow, Pestalozzi, Jacotot, and Herbert Spencer. We cannot therefore too strongly recommend the work to the attention of all those who desire to acquaint themselves with Modern Thought and Experiment in the Science and Art of Teaching.

3. Ascham's Method is avowedly based upon B.I. c. 34 of Clero's De Orates of which the following is a translation:

tore, of which the following is a translation: and more especially upon the latter portion of it. "But in my daily exercises I used, when a youth, to adopt chiefly that method which I knew that Caius Carbo, my adversary, generally practised; which was, that, having selected some nervous piece of poetry, or read over such a portion of a speech as I could retain in my memory, I used to declaim upon what I had been reading in other words, chosen with all the judgment that I possessed. But at length I perceived that in that method there was this inconvenience, that Ennius, if I exercised myself on his verses, or Gracchus, if I laid one of his orations before me, had forestalled such words as were peculiarly appropriate to the subject, and such as were the most elegant and altogether the best; so that, if I used the same words, it profited nothing; if others, it was even prejudicial to me, as I habituated myself to use such as were less eligible. Afterwards I thought I nabituated myself to use such as were less eligible. Afterwards I thought proper, and continued the practice at a rather more advanced age, to translate the orations of the best Greek orators; by fixing upon which I gained this advantage, that while I rendered into Latin what I had read in Greek, I not only used the best words, and yet such as were of common occurrence, but also formed some words by imitation, which would be new to our countrymen, taking care, however, that they were unobjectionable." Ed. 1855.

4. Upon these hints, Ascham—after considering all possible means of teaching languages, which he there discusses in the second book—insisted upon the exhaustive study of one or two books, each to be of the highest upon the exhaustive study of one or two books, each to be of the highest excellence in Its way.

In fact his system might be labelled as

THE DOUBLE TRANSLATION OF A MODEL BOOK.

Mr. Quick remarks, "There are three ways in which the model-book may be studied. 1st, It may be read through rapidly again and again, which was Ratich's plan and Hamilton's; or, 2nd, each lesson may be thoroughly mastered, read in various ways a dozen times at the least, which was Ascham's plan; or, 3rd, the pupil may begin always at the beginning, and advance a little further each time, which was Jacotot's plan," $\nu$. 215.

5. Ascham, at $\nu$, 94, quotes Phny and Dionysius Halicarnasseus in support of this Method in a passage we have not sense to quote hit which is the least of the least support of the Method in a passage we have not sense to quote hit which is the least of the least support.

of his Method, in a passage we have not space to quote, but which is the key to his system. In the brief space that remains to us, we can but outline the process of study he laid down, commending the method to the careful consideration of all teachers.

PREPARATORY.

LEARNER. After the child hath learned perfectly the eight parts of speech: let him then learn the right joining together of substantives with adjectives, the noun with the verb, the relative with the antecedent, p. 25.

A. DOUBLE TRANSLATION.

The Model Book, to begin with, which Ascham recommended in his time was John Sturm's selection of Cicero's letters, for the capacity of children

TO ROGER ASCHAM'S METHOD OF TEACHING LATIN.

This work was first published at Strasburg in 1539, under the title of Ciceronis Epistola Libri iv, puerili educationi confects; and again in 1572. I. MASTER. a. Let him teach the child, cheerfully and plainly, the cause and matter of the letter, p. 26.

b. Then let him construe it into English, so often, as the child may easily carry away the understanding of it, p. 26.

t. Let him parse it over perfectly, p. 26.
II. LEARNER. a. Let the child, by and bye, both conspire [i.e. combine] and parse it over again. So that it may appear, that the child doubteth in nothing that his master taught him before, p. 26.

. So far it is the Mind and Memory comprehending and reproducing the

b. Then the child must take a paper book, and sitting in some place where no one shall prompt him, by himself, let him translate into English his former lesson, p. 26.

MASTER. c. Then shewing it to his master: let his master take from him his Latin book.

LEAR NER. v. Then, pausing an hour at the least: let the child translate his own English into Latin, in another Paper Book.

III. MASTER. a. When the child bringeth it, turned into Latin; let the Master, at the first, lead and teach his Scholer, to join the Rules of his Grammar Book, with the examples of his present lesson, until the Scholar, by himself, be able to fetch out of his Grammar, every Rule for every Example. So, as the Grammar book be ever in the Scholars hand, and also used of him as a Dictionary, for every present use, p. 26.
b. The Master must compare the child's Retranslation with Cicero's book, and lay them both together, p. 26.

Praising him where he doth well, either in choosing or true placing of

Cicero's words.

But if the child miss, either in forgetting a word, or in changing a good for a worse, or misordering the sentence . . . the master shall have good occasion to say. "N. [like M. or N. in the Catechism] Tully would have used such a word, not this. Tully would have placed this word here, not there: would have used this case, this number, this person, this degree, the gender: he would have used this mood, this tense, this simple rather than that compound; this adverb here not there; he would have ended the sentence with this verb, not with that noun or participle, &c.

In these few lines, I have wrapped up the most tedious part of Grammar and also the ground of almost all the Rules . . . this sort, the master shall teach without all error, and the scholar shall learn without great pain: the Master being lead by so sure a guide and the Scholar being brought into so plain and easy a way, p. 27.

Axiom. A child shall take more profit of two faults, gently warned of, then of four things rightly hit, p. 27.

. . All this while, the child shall use to speak no Latin, $. 28.

With this way of good understanding the matter, plain construing, diligent parsing, daily translating, cheerfull admonishing, and heedfull amending of faults; never leaving behind just praise for well doing: I would have the Scholar brought up: while he had read and translated over the first book of Cicero's Epistles chosen out by Sturm; with a good piece of a Comedy of Terence [Terence at that time held a position in Latin Education, which has not since been maintained], p. 28.

> В. ANALYSIS.

As you perceive your scholar to go better and better on away: first, with understanding his lesson more quickly, with passing more readily, with translating more speedily and perfectly than he was wont.

IV. MASTER. a. After, give him longer lessons to translate.
b. Begin to teach him, both in Nouns and Verbs; what is Proper or Lite. ral? what is Figurative? what is Synonymous, what is Diverse, which be Opposites: and which be the most notable Phrases in all his reading.

V. LEARNER. A. Your scholar, after he hath done his Double translating, let him write in a third Paper Book four of the fore-named six. diligently marked out of every lesson. As

Four or else three or two if there be no more.

Proper. Figures. Synonymes. Differents. Oposites. Phrases.

If there be none of these all in some reading yet omit not the order but write.

Differents. None. Opposites.

This diligent translating, joined with this heedful marking, in the foresaid Epistles: and afterward in some plain Oration of Tully, as pro Lege Manilia pro Archaia Poeta, or in those three Ad Caium Casarem shall work such a right choice of words, so straight a framing of sentences, such a true judgement, both to write skilfully and speak witty, as wise men shall both praise and marvel at, pp. 29-31.

C. READING AND A SECOND KIND OF TRANSLATION.

After that your Scholar shall come indeed: first to a ready perfectness in After that your Scholar shall come indeed; first to a ready perfectness in translating, then to a ripe and skilful choice in marking out his six points, p. 87.

VI. LEARNER. a. I would have him read now, a good deal now at every lecture, these books, p. 88.

[1.] Some book of Cicero, as the Third Book of Epistles chosen out by Sturm, de Amicit., de Senect.: or the first book Ad Quint. frat.

[2.] Some Comedy of Terence or Plautus (But in Plautus, skilful choice must be used by the Master to train his scholar to a judgement, in perfecting, and cutting out over old and improper worder.

perfecting, and cutting out over old and improper words).
[3.] Cæsar's Commentaries, in which is seen the unspotted propriety of the Latin tongue; even when it was at its acme.

[4.] Some Orations of Llvy, such as be both longest and plainest.

b. He shall not now daily use translation: but only construe again and parse where ye suspect is any need. Yet let him not omit in these books, parse where ye suspect is any need. Yet it nim not omit in these books, marking diligently and writing out orderly his six points.

VII. MASTER. a. For translating, use you yourself, every second and third day, to choose out some Epistle Ad Atticum, some notable commonplace out of Cicero's Orations, or some other part of Tully, by your discretion: which your Scholar may not know where to find.

Translate it you yourself into plain natural English, and then give it him to translate into Latin again; allowing him good space and time to him to translate into Latin again: allowing him good space and time to do it: both with diligent heed and good advisement.

Here his wit will be new set on work; his judgment for right choice, truly tried; his memory for sure retaining, better exercised than by learning anything without the book. And here, how much he hath pro-villi. MASTER. a. When he bringeth it translated unto you, bring you forth the place of Cicero. Lay them together. Compare the one with the other. Commend his good choice and right placing of words. Show his faults gently, but blame them not over sharply. For of such missings gently admonished of, proceedeth Glad and Good Heed-taking. Of Good Heed-taking, springeth chiefly Knowledge, which after groweth to perfectness: if this Order be diligently used by the Scholar and gently handled by the Master, p. 88.

D. A THIRD KIND OF TRANSLATION.

When, by this diligent and speedy reading over those forenamed good books of Cicero, Terence, Cæsar, and Livy: and by the second kind of translating out of your English, time shall breed skill, and use shall bring perfection: then you may try, if you will, your scholar, with the third kind of translation. Although the two first ways, by mine opinion, be not only sufficient of themselves, but also surer both for the Master's teaching and Scholar's learning, than this third way is. Which is this.

IX. MASTER. Write you in English, some letter, as it were from him to his father or to some other friend; naturally, according to the disposition of the child: or some tale or fable, or plain narration. But yet use you yourself such discretion for choice therein as the matter may be you yourself such discretion for choice therein as the matter may be within the compass, both for words and sentences, of his former learning.

X. LEARNER. Let him translate it into Latin again, abiding in such place where no other scholar may prompt him.

And now take heed, lest your Scholar do not better in some point than you yourself: except you have been diligently exercised in these kinds of translating before, pp. 89, 90.

¶ Cum Gratia et Privilegio Regiæ Maiestatis, per Decennium.

To the honorable Sir William

Cecill Knight, principall Secretarie to the Quenes most excellent Maiestie.

Ondry and reasonable be the causes why learned men have vsed to offer and dedicate such workes as they put abrode, to some such personage as they thinke sittest, either in respect of abilitie of desense, or skill for iuge ment, or private regard of kindeneffe and dutie. Every one of those considerations, Syr, move me of right to offer this my late husbands M. Aschams worke vnto you. For well remembryng how much all good learnyng oweth unto you for defense therof, as the Vniuersitie of Cambrige, of which my faid late hufband was a member, have in chosing you their worthy Chaunceller acknowledged, and how happily you have spent your time in such studies and caried the vse therof to the right ende, to the good feruice of the Quenes Maiestie and your contrey to all our benefites, thyrdly how much my fayd hufband was many wayes bound vnto you, and how gladly and comfortably he vied in hys lyfe to recognife and report your goodnesse toward hym, leavyng with me then hys poore widow and a great fort of orphanes a good comfort in the hope of your good continuance, which I have truly found to me and myne, and therfore do duely and dayly pray for you and yours: I could not finde any man for whose name this booke was more agre able for hope [of] protection, more mete for fubmission to iudgement, nor more due for respect of worthynesse of your part and thankefulneffe of my hufbandes and myne. Good I trust it shall do, as I am put in great hope by many very well learned that can well judge therof. Mete therefore I compt it that fuch good as my hufband was able to doe and leave to the common weale, it should be received under your name, and that the world should owe thanke therof to you, to whom my husband the authour of it was for good receyued of you, most dutiefully bounden. And fo befechyng you, to take on you the defense of this booke, to auaunce the good that may come of it by your allowance and furtherance to publike vfe and benefite, and to accept the thankefull recognition of me and my poore children, trustyng of the continuance of your good memorie of M. Ascham and his, and dayly commendyng the prosperous estate of you and yours to God whom you ferue and whoes you are, I rest to trouble you.

Your humble Margares

A Præface to the Reader.

Hen the great plage was at London, the yeare 1563. the Quenes Maiestie Queene Elizabeth, lay at her Castle of Windsore: Where, vpon the 10.day of December, it fortuned, that in Sir William Cicells chamber, hir Highnesse Principall Secretarie, there dined togither these personages, M. Secretarie him felfe, Syr William Peter, Syr J. Mafon, D. Wotton, Syr Richard Sackuille Treasurer of the Exchecker, Syr Walter Mildmaye Chauncellor of the Exchecker, M. Haddon Master of Requestes, M. John Astley Master of the Iewell house, M. Bernard Hampton, M. Nicasius, and J. Of which number, the most part were of hir Maiesties most honourable privile Counsell, and the reast serving hir in verie good place. I was glad than, and do reioice yet to remember, that my chance was so happie, to be there that day, in the companie of so manie wise and good men togither, as hardly than could have beene pi[c]ked out againe, out of all England beside.

M. Secretarie hath this accustomed maner, though his head be neuer so full of most weightie affaires of the Realme, yet, at diner time he doth seeme to lay them alwaies aside: and findeth euer sitte occasion to taulke pleasantlie of other matters, but most gladlie of some matter of learning: wherein, he will curtessie lieare the minde of the meanest at his Table.

Not long after our fitting doune, I haue strange newes brought me, fayth M. Secretarie, this morning, M. Secretathat diuerse Scholers of Eaton, be runne awaie from the Schole, for seare of beating. Whereupon, M. Secretarie tooke occasion, to wishe, that some more discretion were in many Scholemasters, in vsing correction, than commonlie there is. Who many times, punishe rather, the weakenes of nature, than the fault of the Scholer. Whereby, many Scholers, that might else proue well, be driuen to hate learning, before they knowe, what learning meaneth: and so, are made willing to forsake their booke, and be glad to be put to any other kinde of liuing.

M. Peter, as one somewhat seuere of M. Peter. nature, faid plainlie, that the Rodde onelie, was the fworde, that must keepe, the Schole in obedience, and the Scholer in good order. M. Wotton, a man milde of nature, with foft voice, and fewe wordes, inclined to M. Secretaries judgement, and faid, in mine opinion, the Scholehoufe should be in Ludus lideede, as it is called by name, the houfe of terarum. playe and pleafure, and not of feare and bondage: and as I do remember, fo faith Socrates in Plato de one place of Plato. And therefore, if a Rodde carie the feare of a Sworde, it is no maruell, if those that be fearefull of nature, chose rather to forfake the Plaie, than to stand alwaies within the feare of a Sworde in a fonde mans handling. Mason, after his maner, was verie merie with both parties, pleafantlie playing, both, with the shrewde touches of many courste boyes, and with the fmall difcretion of many leude Scholemasters. M. Haddon. Haddon was fullie of M. Peters opinion, and faid, that the best Scholemaster of our time, was the greatest beater, and named the Person. The Author of quoth I, it was his good fortune, to fend from his Schole, vnto the Vniuersitie, one of the best Scholers in deede of all our time, yet wife men do thinke, that that came fo to passe, rather, by the great towardnes of the Scholer, than by the great beating of the Master: and whether this be true or no, you your selfe are best witnes. I said somewhat sarder in the matter, how, and whie, yong children, were soner allured by loue, than driuen by beating, to atteyne good learning: wherein I was the bolder to say my minde, bicause M. Secretarie curteslie prouoked me thereunto: or else, in such a companie, and namelie in his præsence, my wonte is, to be more willing, to vse mine eares, than to occupie my tonge.

Syr Walter Mildmaye, M. Astley, and the rest, said verie litle: onelie Syr Rich. Sackuill, faid nothing at all. After dinner I went vp to read with the Oueenes Maiestie. We red than togither in the Greke tongue as I well remember, that noble Oration of Demosthenes against Æschines, for his false dealing in his Ambassage to king ραπρεσβ. Philip of Macedonie. Syr Rich. Sackuile came fone after: and finding me in hir Maie-Syr R. Sackuiles fties privile chamber, he tooke me by communication the hand, and carying me to a windoe, with the Author of this faid, M. Afcham, I would not for a good booke. deale of monie, haue bene, this daie, absent from diner. Where, though I said nothing, yet I gaue as good eare, and do confider as well the taulke, that passed, as any one did there. M. Secretarie said very wifely, and most truely, that many yong wittes be driuen to hate learninge, before they know what learninge is. I can be good witnes to this my felfe: For a fond Scholemaster, before I was fullie sourtene yeare olde, draue me fo, with feare of beating, from all loue of learninge, as nowe, when I know, what difference it is, to have learninge, and to have litle, or none at all, I feele it my greatest greise, and finde it my greatest hurte, that euer came to me, that it was my fo ill chance, to light vpon fo lewde a Scholemaster. But seing it is but in vain, to lament thinges paste, and also wisdome to looke to thinges to cum, furely, God willinge, if God lend me life, I will make this my mifhap, fome occasion of good hap, to litle Robert Sackwile my sonnes sonne. For whose bringinge vp, I would gladlie, if it so please you, vse speciallie your good aduice. I heare saie, you have a sonne, moch of his age: we wil deale thus togither. Point you out a Scholemaster, who by your order, shall teache my sonne and yours, and for all the rest, I will provide, yea though they three do cost me a couple of hundred poundes by yeare: and beside, you shall sinde me as sast a Frend to you and yours, as perchance any you have. Which promise, the worthie Ientleman surelie kept with me, vntill his dying daye.

We had than farther taulke togither, of bringing vp of children: of the nature, of quicke, and hard wittes: of the right choice of a good witte: of Feare, and loue in teachinge children. We passed from children and came to yonge men, namely, Ientlemen: we taulked of their to moch libertie, to liue as they lust: of their letting louse to fone, to ouermoch experience of ill, contrarie to the good order of many good olde common welthes of the Perfians and Grekes: of witte gathered, and good fortune gotten, by fome, onely by experience, without learning. And lastlie, he required of me verie earnestlie, to shewe, what I thought of the common goinge of Englishe men into Italie. But, fayth he, bicause this place, and this tyme, will not fuffer fo long taulke, as thefe good matters require, therefore I pray you, at my request, and at your leyfure, put in some order of writing, the cheife pointes of this our taulke, concerning, the right order of teachinge, and honestie of liuing, for the good bringing vp of children and yong men. And furelie, beside contentinge me, you shall both please and profit verie many others. I made fome excuse by lacke of habilitie, and weakenes of bodie: well, fayth he, I am not now to learne, what you can do. Our deare frende, good M. Goodricke, whose iudgement I could well beleue, did once for all, fatiffye me fullie therein. Againe, I heard you fay, not long agoe, that you may thanke Syr John Cheke, for all the learninge you haue: And I know verie well my felfe, that you did teach the Quene. And therefore feing God did so blesse you, to make you the Scholer of the best Master, and also the Scholemaster of the best Scholer, that euer were in our tyme, surelie, you should please God, benefite your countrie, and honest your owne name, if you would take the paines, to impart to others, what you learned of soch a Master, and how ye taught such a scholer. And, in vttering the stuffe ye received of the one, in declaring the order ye tooke with the other, ye shall never lacke, neither matter, nor maner, what to write, nor how to write in this kinde of Argument.

I beginning fome farther excuse, sodeinlie was called to cum to the Queene. The night following, I slept litle, my head was so sull of this our former taulke, and I so mindefull, somewhat to satisfie the honest request of so deare a frend. I thought to præpare some litle treatise for a New yeares gift that Christmas. But, as it chanceth to busie builders, so, in building thys my poore Scholehouse (the rather bicause the forme of it is somewhat new, and differing from others) the worke rose dailie higher and wider, than I thought it

And though it appeare now, and be in verie deede, but a fmall cotage, poore for the stuffe, and rude for the workemanship, yet in going forward, I found the fite fo good, as I was lothe to give it ouer, but the making fo costlie, outreaching my habilitie, as many tymes I wished, that some one of those three, my deare frendes, with full purffes, Syr Tho. Smithe, M. Haddon, or M. Watfon, had had the doing of it. M. { Hauw. Watson. Yet, neuerthelesse, I my felfe, spending gladlie that litle, that I gatte at home by Syr I. Cheke. good Syr Iohn Cheke, and that I bor-I. Sturminus Plato. rowed abroad of my frend Sturmius, befide Aristotle. fomewhat that was left me in Reuersion Cicero. by my olde Masters, Plato, Aristotle, and Cicero. I have at last patched it vp, as I could, and as you If the matter be meane, and meanly handled, I pray you beare, both with me, and it: for neuer worke went vp in worse wether, with mo lettes and stoppes. than this poore Scholehouse of mine. Sackuile dieth, that worthie Ientleman: That earnest fauorer and furtherer of Gods true Religion: That faithfull Seruitor to his Prince and Countrie: A louer of learning, and all learned men: Wife in all doinges: Curteffe to all perfons: shewing spite to none: doing good to many: and as I well found, to me fo fast a frend, as I neuer lost the like before. Whan he was gone, my hart was dead. There was not one, that woare a blacke gowne for him, who caried a heuier hart for him, than I. Whan he was gone, I cast this booke awaie: I could not looke vpon it, but with weping eyes, in remembring him, who was the onelie fetter on, to do it, and would have bene, not onelie a glad commender of it, but also a fure and certaine comfort, to me and mine, for it. Almost two yeares togither, this booke lay scattered, and neglected. and had bene quite given over of me, if the goodnesse of one had not given me fome life and spirite againe. God, the mouer of goodnesse, prosper alwaies him and his, as he hath many times comforted me and mine. and, I trust to God, shall comfort more and more. whom, most iustlie I may faie, and verie oft, and alwaies gladlie, I am wont to fay, that fweete verse of Sophocles, spoken by Oedipus to worthie Thefeus.

Soph. in Oed. Col. ἔχω, [γὰρ ἄ'] χω διὰ σε, κοὖκ ἄλλον βροτῶν.

Thys hope hath helped me to end this booke: which, if he allowe, I shall thinke my labours well imployed, and shall not moch æsteme the misliking of any others. And I trust, he shall thinke the better of it, bicause he shall finde the best part thereof, to cum out of his Schole, whom he, of all men loued and liked beft.

Yet fome men, frendly enough of nature, but of fmall iudgement in learninge, do thinke, I take to moch paines, and fpend to moch time, in fettinge forth these childrens affaires. But those good men were neuer brought vp in Socrates Schole, who faith plainlie, that no man goeth about a more godlie purpose, than he that is mindfull of the good bringing vp, both of hys owne, and other mens children...

Therfore, I truft, good and wife men, will thinke well of this my doing. And of other, that thinke otherwife, I will thinke my felfe, they are but men, to be pardoned for their follie, and pitied for their ignoraunce.

In writing this booke, I have had earnest respecte to three speciall pointes, trothe of Religion, honestie in liuing, right order in learning. In which three waies, I praie God, my poore children may diligently waulke: for whose sake, as nature would, and reason required, and necessitie also somewhat compelled, I was the willinger to take these paines.

For, feing at my death, I am not like to leaue them any great store of liuing, therefore in my life time, I thought good to bequeath vnto them, in this litle booke, as in my Will and Testament, the right waie to good learning: which if they followe, with the feare of God, they shall verie well cum to sufficiencie of liuinge.

I wishe also, with all my hart, that yong M. Rob. Sackuille, may take that fructe of this labor, that his worthie Grauntsather purposed he should have done: And if any other do take, either proffet, or pleasure hereby, they have cause to thanke M. Robert Sackville, for whom speciallie this my Scholemaster was prouided.

A Præface to the Reader.

And one thing I would have the Reader confider in readinge this booke, that bicaufe, no Scholemaster hath charge of any childe, before he enter into hys Schole, therefore I leaving all former care, of their good bringing vp, to wife and good Parentes, as a matter not belonging to the Scholemaster, I do appoynt thys my Scholemaster, than, and there to begin, where his office and charge beginneth. Which charge lasteth not long, but vntill the Scholer be made hable to go to the Vniuersitie, to procede in Logike, Rhetoricke, and other kindes of learning.

Yet if my Scholemaster, for loue he beareth to hys Scholer, shall teach hym somewhat for hys furtherance, and better iudgement in learning, that may serue him seuen yeare after in the Vniuersitie, he doth hys Scholer no more wrong, nor deserueth no worse name thereby, than he doth in London, who sellinge silke or cloth vnto his frend, doth giue him better measure, than either hys promise or bargaine was.

Farewell in Christ

The first booke for the youth.

Fter the childe hath learned perfitlie the eight partes of speach, let him then learne the right ioyning togither of substantiues with adiectiues, the nowne with the verbe, the relatiue with the antecedent. And in learninge farther hys Syntaxis, by mine aduice, he shall not vfe the common order in common scholes, for making of latines: wherby, the childe commonlie learneth, first, an euill choice of wordes, (and right Cic. de choice of wordes, faith Cafar, is the Cla. or. foundation of eloquence) than, a wrong placing of wordes: and lastlie, an ill framing of the fentence, with a peruerse iudgement, both of wordes and sentences. These saultes, taking once roote in youghte, be neuer, or hardlie, pluckt away in age.

Moreouer, there is no one thing, that hath the more, either dulled the wittes, or taken awaye the will of children from learning, then the care they haue, to fatisfie their masters, in making of latines.

For, the scholer, is commonlie beat for the making, when the master were more worthie to be beat for the mending, or rather, marring of the same: The master many times, being as ignorant as the childe, what to saie properlie and sittle to the matter.

Two scholemasters have set forth in print, either of them a booke, of soch kinde of latines, Horman Horman and Whittington.

Whittington.

A childe shall learne of the better of them, that, which an other daie, if he be wife, and cum to iudgement, he must be faine to vnlearne againe.

There is a waie, touched in the first booke of De Oratore, which, wiselie brought into scholes, truely taught, and constantly vsed, would not onely take wholly away this butcherlie seare in making of latines, but would also, with ease and pleasure, and in short time, as I know by good experience, worke a true choice and placing of wordes, a right ordering of sentences, an easie vnderstandyng of the tonge, a readines to speake, a facultie to write, a true iudgement, both of his owne, and other mens doinges, what tonge so ever he doth vse.

The waie is this. After the three Concordances learned, as I touched before, let the mafter read vnto hym the Epiftles of Cicero, gathered togither and chosen out by Sturmius, for the capacitie of children

First, let him teach the childe, cherefullie and plainlie, the cause, and matter of the letter: then, let him construe it into Englishe, so oft, as the childe may easilie carie awaie the vnderstanding of it: Lastlie, parse it ouer persitlie. This done thus, let the childe, by and by, both construe and parse it ouer againe: fo, that it may appeare, that the childe douteth in nothing, that his master taught him before. After this, the childe must take a paper booke, and fitting in fome place, where no man shall prompe him, by him self, let him translate into Englishe his former lesson. Then shewing it to his Two paper master, let the master take from him his latin booke, and paufing an houre, at the leaft, than let the childe translate his owne Englishe into latin againe, in an other paper booke. When the childe bringeth it, turned into latin, the master must compare it with Tullies booke, and laie them both togither; and where the childe doth well, either in chosing, or true Children learne placing of Tullies wordes, let the master praise him, and saie here ye do well. For I by prayse. affure you, there is no fuch whetftone, to fharpen a good witte and encourage a will to learninge, as is praife.

But if the childe misse, either in forgetting a worde, or in chaunging a good with a worse, or misordering the sentence, I would not have the master, either froune, or chide with him, if the childe have done his diligence, and vsed no trewandship therein. For I know by good experience, that a childe shall take more profit of two sautes, ientlie warned of, then Ientleness in of source thinges, rightly hitt. For than, teaching the master shall have good occasion to saie vnto him. N. Tullie would have vsed such a worde, not this: Tullie would have placed this word here, not there: would have vsed this case, this number, this person, this degree, this gender: he would have vsed this moode, this tens, this simple, rather than this compound: this adverbe here, not there: he would have ended the sentence with this verbe, not with that nowne or participle. etc.

In thefe fewe lines, I have wrapped vp, the most tedious part of Grammer: and also the ground of almost all the Rewles, that are so busile taught by the Master, and so hardlie learned by the Scholer, in all common Scholes: which after this fort, the mafter shall teach without all error, and the scholer shall learne without great paine: the master being led by fo fure a guide, and the scholer being brought into so plaine and easie a waie. And therefore, we do not contemne Rewles, but we gladlie teach Rewles: and teach them, more plainlie, fensiblie, and orderlie, than they be commonlie taught in common Scholes. whan the Master shall compare Tullies booke with his [the] Scholers translation, let the Master, at the first, lead and teach his Scholer, to ioyne the Rewles of his Grammer booke, with the examples of his prefent lesson, vntill the Scholer, by him felfe, be hable to fetch out of his Grammer, euerie Rewle, for euerie Example: So, as the Grammer booke be euer in the Scholers hand, and also vsed of him, as a Dictionarie, for euerie present vse. This is a liuely and perfite waie of teaching of Rewles: where the common waie, vsed in common Scholes, to read the Grammer alone by it selfe, is tedious for the Master, hard for the Scholer, colde and vncumfortable for them bothe.

Let your Scholer be neuer afraide, to aske you any dou[b]t, but vse discretlie the best allurements ye can, to encorage him to the same: lest, his ouermoch hearinge of you, driue him to feeke some misorderlie shifte: as, to seeke to be helped by some other booke, or to be prompted by some other Scholer, and so goe aboute to beg[u]ile you moch, and him selse more.

With this waie, of good vnderstanding the ma[t]ter,

With this waie, of good vnderstanding the ma[t]ter, plaine construinge, diligent parsinge, dailie translatinge, cherefull admonishinge, and heedefull amendinge of faultes: neuer leauinge behinde iuste praise for well doinge, I would have the Scholer brought vp withall, till he had red, and translated over ye first booke of Epistles chosen out by Sturmius, with a good peece of a Comedie of Terence also.

All this while, by mine aduife, the childe shall vse to speake no latine: For, as Cicero saith in like matter, Latin speak with like wordes, loquendo, male loqui discunt. And, that excellent learned man, G. Budæus. G. Budæus, in his Greeke Commentaries, fore complaineth, that whan he began to learne the latin tonge, vse of speaking latin at the table, and essewhere, vnaduisedlie, did bring him to soch an euill choice of wordes, to soch a crooked framing of sentences, that no one thing did hurt or hinder him more, all the daies of his life afterward, both for redinesse in speaking, and also good iudgement in writinge.

In very deede, if children were brought vp, in foch a house, or soch a Schole, where the latin tonge were properlie and persitlie spoken, as Tib. and Ca. Gracci were brought vp, in their mother Cornelias house, surelie, than the dailie vse of speaking, were the best and readiest waie, to learne the latin tong. But now, commonlie, in the best Scholes in England, for wordes, right choice is smallie regarded, true proprietrie whollie neglected, consusion is brought in, barbariousnesse is bred up so in yong wittes, as afterward they be, not onelie marde for speaking, but also corrupted in judge-

Yetallmen couet to have their children speake latin: and fo do I verie earnestlie too. We bothe, haue one purpose: we agree in desire, we wish one end: but we differ fomewhat in order and waie, that leadeth rightlie to that end. Other would have them fpeake at all aduentures: and, fo they be speakinge, to speake, the Master careth not, the Scholer knoweth not, what. This is, to feeme, and not to bee: except it be, to be bolde without shame, rashe without skill, full of wordes without witte. I wish to have them speake so, as it may well appeare, that the braine doth gouerne the tonge, and that reason leadeth forth the taulke. crates doctrine is true in Plato, and well Plato. marked, and truely by Horace in Arte Horat.

Poetica, that, where fo euer knowledge doth accompanie the witte, there best vtterance doth alwaies awaite vpon the tonge: For, good vnderstanding must first be bred in the childe, which, being nurifhed with skill, and vse of writing (as I will teach breedeth ready more largelie hereafter) is the onelie waie speakyng.

to bring him to judgement and readinesse in speakinge: and that in farre shorter time (if he followe constantlie the trade of this lit[t]le lesson) then he shall do, by common teachinge of the common scholes in England.

But, to go forward, as you perceive, your scholer to goe better and better on awaie, first, with vnderstanding his lesson more quicklie, with parsing more readelie, with translating more spedelie and perfitlie then he was wonte, after, giue him longer lessons to translate: and withall, begin to teach him, both in nownes, and

This diligent translating, ioyned with this heedefull marking, in the foresaid Epistles, and afterwarde in fome plaine Oration of Tullie, as, pro lege Manil: pro Archia Poeta, or in those three ad. C. Caf: shall worke soch a right choise of wordes, so streight a framing of sentences, soch a true iudgement, both to write skilfullie, and speake wittlelie, as wise men shall both praise, and maruell at.

If your scholer do misse sometimes, in marking rightlie these foresaid sixe thinges, chide not hastelie: for that shall, both dull his witte, and discorage his diligence: but monish him genteraching.

telie: which shall make him, both willing to amende, and glad to go forward in loue and hope of learning.

I haue now wished, twise or thrise, this gentle nature, to be in a Scholemaster: And, that I haue done so, neither by chance, nor without some reason, I will now declare at large, why, in mine opinion, Loue. loue is fitter then seare, ientlenes better Feare. then beating, to bring vp a childe rightlie in learninge.

With the common vse of teaching and beating in common scholes of England, I will not greatlie Common contend: which if I did, it were but a small scholes. grammaticall controuers, neither belonging to herese nor treason, nor greatly touching God nor the Prince: although in very deede, in the end, the good or ill bringing vp of children, doth as much serue to the good or ill feruice, of God, our Prince, and our whole countrie, as any one thing doth beside.

I do gladlie agree with all good Scholemasters in these pointes: to haue children brought to good persitnes in learning: to all honestie in maners: to haue all sau[1]tes rightlie amended: to haue euerie vice seuerelie corrected: but for the order and waie that leadeth rightlie to these pointes, we somewhat differ. For commonlie, many scholemasters, some, as Sharpe I haue seen, moe, as I haue heard tell, Scholemasters be of so crooked a nature, as, when they meete with a hard witted scholer, they rather breake him, than bowe him, rather marre him, then mend him. For whan the scholemaster is angrie with some other matter, then will he fonest faul to beate his scholer: and though he him felfe should be punished for his folie, yet must he beate fome scholer for his pleasure: though there be no cause for him to do so, nor yet fault in the scholer to deserve so. These ye will fay, be fond fcholemasters, and fewe they be, that be found to be foch. They be fond in deede, but furelie ouermany foch be found euerie where. But this will I fay, that even the wifest of your great beaters, do as oft punishe nature, as they do correcte faultes. Yea, many times, the better nature, is forer punished: For, if one, by quicknes of witte, take his lesson readelie, an other, by hardnes of witte, taketh it not fo fpeedelie: the first is alwaies commended, the other is commonlie punished: whan a wife scholemaster, should rather discretelie consider the right disposition of both their natures, and not fo moch wey what either of them is able to do now, as what either of them is likelie to do for learnyng. hereafter. For this I know, not onelie by reading of bookes in my studie, but also by experience of life, abrode in the world, that those, which be commonlie the wifest, the best learned, and best men also, when they be olde, were neuer commonlie the quickest of witte, when they were yonge. The causes why, amongest other, which be many, that moue me thus to thinke, be thefe fewe, which I will Quicke wittes commonlie, be apte to take, vnapte to keepe: foone hote and defirous of this and that: as colde and fone wery of the fame againe: more quicke to enter fpedelie, than hable to pearfe farre: euen like ouer sharpe tooles, whose edges be verie foone turned. Soch wittes delite them felues in easie and pleasant studies, and neuer passe farre forward in hie and hard sciences. And therefore the quickest wittes commonlie may proue the best Poetes, but not the wifest Orators: readie of tonge to speak bold-Quicke wittes, for maners and lyfe.

lie, not deepe of iudgement, either for good counsell or wife writing. Also, for maners and life, quicke wittes commonlie, be, in defire, newfangle[d], in purpose, vnconstant, light to promise any thing, readie to forget euery thing: both benefite and iniurie: and therby neither fast to frend, nor fearefull to soe: inquisitive of euery trisle, not secret in greatest affaires: bolde, with any person: busie, in euery matter: so[o]thing, soch as be present: nipping any that is absent: of nature also, alwaies, flattering their betters, enuying their equals, despising their inferiors: and, by quicknes of witte, verie quicke and readie, to like none so well as them selves.

Moreouer commonlie, men, very quicke of witte, be alfo, verie light of conditions: and thereby, very readie of disposition, to be caried ouer quicklie, by any light cumpanie, to any riot and vnthriftines when they be yonge: and therfore feldome, either honest of life, or riche in liuing, when they be olde. For, quicke in witte, and light in maners, be, either feldome troubled, or verie fone we[e]ry, in carying a verie heuie purse. Quicke wittes also be, in most part of all their doinges, ouer quicke, hastie, rashe, headie, and brainsicke. Thefe two last wordes, Headie, and Brainsicke, be fitte and proper wordes, rifing naturallie of the matter. and tearmed aptlie by the condition, of ouer moch quickenes of witte. In yougthe also they be, readie fcoffers, privile mockers, and ever over light and mer[r]y. In aige, fone testie, very waspishe, and alwaies ouer miserable: and yet sewe of them cum to any great aige, by reason of their misordered life when they were yong: but a greate deale fewer of them cum to shewe any great countenance, or beare any great authoritie abrode in the world, but either liue obfcurelie, men know not how, or dye obfcurelie, men marke not whan. They be like trees, that shewe forth, faire blossoms and broad leaues in fpring time, but bring out fmall and not long lasting fruite in haruest time; and that onelie foch, as fall, and rotte, before they be ripe, and fo, neuer, or feldome, cum to any good at all. For this ye shall finde most true by experience, that amongest a number of quicke wittes in youthe, fewe be found, in the end, either verie fortunate for them felues, or verie profitable to ferue the common wealth, but decay and vanish, men know not which way: except a very fewe, to whom peraduenture blood and happie parentage, may perchance purchace a long standing vpon the stage. The which felicitie, because it commeth by others procuring, not by their owne deseruinge, and stand by other mens feete, and not by their own, what owtward brag so euer is borne by them, is in deed, of it selfe, and in wise mens eyes, of no great estimation.

Some wittes, moderate enough by nature, be many Som sciences tymes marde by ouer moen reached tymes marde by ouer moen function. This fciences, tymes marde by ouer moch studie and vse metick, and Geometrie. Thies fciences, as they sharpen mens wittes ouer moch, so they change mens maners ouer fore, if they be not moderatlie mingled, and wifelie applied to fom good vie of life. Mathematicall Marke all Mathematicall heades, which be onely and wholy bent to those sciences, how folitarie they be themselues, how vnfit to liue with others, and how vnapte to ferue in the world. is not onelie knowen now by common experience, but vttered long before by wife mens Iudgement and fentence. Galene faith, moch Musick mar-Galen. reth mens maners: and Plate hath a notable place of the fame thing in his bookes de Rep. well marked alfo, and excellentlie translated by Tullie himself. Of this matter, I wrote once more at large, xx. yeare a go, in my booke of shoting: now I thought but to touch it, to proue, that ouer moch quicknes of witte, either given by nature, or sharpened by studie, doth not commonlie bring forth, eyther greatest learning, best maners, or happiest life in the end.

Contrariewife, a witte in youth, that is not ouer Hard wits in dulle, heavie, knottie and lumpishe, but learning. hard, rough, and though somewhat staffishe, as Tullie wishesh otium, quietum, non languidum: and negotium cum labore, non cum periculo, such a witte I fay, if it be, at the first well handled by the mother, and rightlie smo[o]thed and wrought as it should, not ouer[t]whartlie, and against the wood, by the scholemaster, both for learning, and hole course of liuing, proueth alwaies the best. In woode and stone, not the softest, but hardest, be alwaies aptest, for portrature, both sairest for pleasure, and most durable for proffit. Hard wittes be hard to receive, but sure to keepe: painefull without werinesse, hedefull without wavering, constant without newsanglenes: bearing heavier thinges, though not easelie, yet willinglie; entring hard thinges, though not easelie, yet depelie; and so cum to that persitnes of learning in the ende, that quicke wittes, seeme in hope, but do not in deede, or else verie seldome, euer attaine vnto. Hard wits in maners and life, hard wittes commonlie, ar [e] hardlie caried, either to desire euerie new thing, or else to maruell at euery strange thinge: and therefore they be carefull and diligent in their own matters, not curious and busey in other mens affaires: and so, they becum wise them selues, and also ar [e] counted honest by others. They be graue, stedsast, silent of tong, secret of hart. Not hastie in making, but constant in ke [e] ping any promise. Not rashe in vttering, but war [y] e in considering euery matter: and therby, not quicke in speaking, but deepe of iudgement, whether they write, or giue counsell in all waightie affaires. And theis be the men, that becum in the end, both most happie for themselues, and alwaise best estemed abrode in the world.

I have bene longer in describing, the nature, the good or ill successe, of the quicke and hard witte, than perchance som will thinke, this place and the best wittes matter doth require. But my purpose was hereby, plainlie to vtter, what iniurie is offered to all learninge, and to the common welthe also, first, by the sond father in chosing, but chieslie by the lewd scholemaster in beating and driuing away the best natures from learning. A childe that is still, filent, constant, and somewhat hard of witte, is either neuer chosen by the father to be made a scholer, or else, when he commeth to the schole, he is smally regarded, little looked vnto, he lacketh teaching, he lacketh coraging, he lacketh all thinges, onelie he neuer lacketh beating, nor any word, that may moue him to hate learninge, nor any deed that may drive him from learning, to any other kinde of living.

And when this fadde natured, and hard witted child, is bette from his booke, and becummeth after eyther student of the common lawe, or page in the Court, or feruingman, or bound prentice to a merchant, or to fom handiecraste, he proueth in the ende, wifer, happier and many tymes honester too, than many of theis quick wittes do, by their learninge.

Learning is, both hindred and injured to[o], by the ill choice of them, that fend yong fcholers to the vniuer-fities. Of whom must nedes cum all oure Diuines, Lawyers, and Physicions.

Thies yong scholers be chosen commonlie, as yong the ill choice of wittes for learning.

The ill choice apples be chosen by children, in a faire garden about S. Iames tyde: a childe will chose a sweeting, because it is presentlie faire and pleasant, and resuse a Runnet, because it is than grene, hard, and sowre, whan the one, if it be eaten, doth breed, both wormes and ill humors: the other if it stand his tyme, be ordered and kepte as it should, is holsom of it self, and helpeth to the good digestion of other meates: Sweetinges, will receive wormes, rotte, and dye on the tree, and neuer or seldom cum to the gathering for good and lasting store.

For verie greafe of hearte I will not applie the fimilitude: but hereby, is plainlie feen, how learning is robbed of hir best wittes, first by the greate beating, and after by the ill chosing of scholers, to go to the vniuersities. Whereof cummeth partelie, that lewde and spitefull prouerbe, sounding to the greate hurte of learning, and fliame of learned men, that, the greatest

Clerkes be not the wifest men.

And though I, in all this discourse, seem plainlie to prefer, hard and roughe wittes, before quicke and light wittes, both for learning and maners, yet am I not ignorant that fom quicknes of witte, is a fingular gifte of God, and fo most rare emonges men, and namelie fuch a witte, as is quicke without lightnes, sharpe without brittlenes, defirous of good thinges without newfanglenes, diligent in painfull thinges without werifomnes, and conftant in good will to do all thinges well, as I know was in Syr Iohn Cheke, and is in fom, that yet liue, in whome all theis faire qualities of witte ar[e] fullie mette togither.

But it is notable and trewe, that Socrates faith in Plato to his frende Crito. That, that Plato. in number of men is fewest, which far ex- Critone. cede, either in good or ill, in wifdom or folie, but the meane betwixt both, be the greatest num-ber: which he proueth trewe in diuerse verie ill men, be sewest in other thinges: as in greyhoundes, emonges number. which fewe are found, exceding greate, or exceding litle, exceding fwift, or exceding flowe: And therfore, I fpeaking of quick and hard wittes, I ment, the common number of quicke and hard wittes, emonges the which, for the most parte, the hard witte, proueth manie times, the better learned, wifer and honester man: and therfore, do I the more lament, that foch wittes commonlie be either kepte from learning, by fond fathers, or be[a]t[e] from learning by lewde scholemasters.

And fpeaking thus moche of the wittes of children for learning, the opportunitie of the place, and goodnes of the matter might require to have here declared the most speciall notes of a good witte for learning in a childe, after the maner and custume of a good horfman, who is skilfull, to know, and hable to tell others, how by certein fure fignes, a man may choise a colte, that is like to proue an other day, excellent for the faddle. And it is pit[t]ie, that commonlie, more care is had, yea and that emonges verie wife men, to finde out rather a cun-A good Rider ed than a good better rewardnynge man for their horfe, than a cunnyng man for their children. They fav nav in worde, but they do fo in dede. For, to the one, they will gladlie giue a stipend of 200. Crounes by [the] yeare, and loth to offer to the other, 200. shillinges. God, that fitteth in heauen laugheth their choice to skorne, and rewardeth their liberalitie as it should: for Horse well broken, chil-dren ill taught. he fuffereth them, to haue, tame and well ordered horfe, but wilde and vnfortunate Children: and therfore in the ende they finde more pleafure in their horse, than comforte in their children.

But concerning the trewe notes of the best wittes for learning in a childe, I will reporte, not myne own opinion, but the very iudgement of him, that was counted the best teacher and wifest man that learning maketh mention of, and that is Socrates in de Rep.

Plato, who expresses feuen plaine notes to choise a good witte in a child for learninge.

And bicause I write English, and to Englishemen, I will plainlie declare in Englishe both, what thies wordes of Plato meane, and how aptlie they be linked, and how orderlie they fol[I]ow one an other.

-1. Εύφυής.

witte. Is he, that is apte by goodnes of witte, will. and appliable by readines of will, to learning, having all other qualities of the minde and partes of the bodie, that must an other day serue learning, not tro[u]bled, mangled, and halfed, but founde, whole, full, and hable to do their office: as, a tong, The tong. not stamering, or ouer hardlie drawing forth wordes. but plaine, and redie to deliuer the meaning of the minde: a voice, not foste, weake, piping, The voice. womannishe, but audible, stronge, and manlike: countenance, not werishe and crabbed, but Face. faire and cumlie: a personage, not wretched and deformed, but taule and goodlie: for Stature. furelie a cumlie countenance, with a goodlie stature, geueth credit to learning, and authoritie Learnyng to the person: otherwise commonlie, either oumlie open contempte, or priuie diffauour doth personage. hurte, or hinder, both person and learning. And, euen as a faire stone requireth to be sette in the finest gold, with the best workmanshyp, or else it leseth moch of the Grace and price, euen fo, excellencye in learning, and namely Divinitie, ioyned with a cumlie perfonage, is a meruelous Iewell in the world. And how can a cumlie bodie be better employed, than to ferue the fairest exercise of Goddes greatest gifte, and that is learning. But commonlie, the fairest bodies, ar[e] bestowed on the foulest purposes. I would it were not fo: and with examples herein I will not medle: yet I wifhe, that those shold, both mynde it, and medle with it, which have most occasion to looke to it, as good and wife fathers shold do, and greatest authoritie to amend it, as good and wife magistrates ought to do: And yet I will not let, openlie to lament the vnfortunate case of learning herein.

For, if a father haue foure fonnes, three faire and well formed both mynde and bodie, the fourth, wretched, laine, and deformed, his creatures choice shalbe, to put the worst to learning, commonlie set to learning.

as one good enoughe to becum a fcholer.

I have fpent the most parte of my life in the Vniuer-litie, and therfore I can beare good witnes that many fathers commonlie do thus; wherof, I have hard many wife, learned, and as good men as eue I knew, make great, and oft complainte: a good horseman will choise no soch colte, neither for his own, nor yet for his masters sadle. And thus moch of the first note.

2. Μνήμων.

Memorie. Good of memorie, a special parte of the first note $\dot{\epsilon}\nu\phi\nu\dot{\gamma}s$, and a mere benefite of nature: yet it is so necessarie for learning: as Plato maketh it a separate and perfite note of it selfe, and that so principall a note, as without it, all other gistes of nature do Aul. Gel. small service to learning, Afranius, that olde Latine Poete maketh Memorie the mother of learning and wisedome, saying thus.

Vfus me genuit, Mater peperit memoria, and though it be the mere gifte of nature, yet is memorie well preferued by vse, and moch encreased by order, as our fcholer must learne an other day in the signes of a good memorie. Vniuersitie: but in a childe, a good memorie is well known, by three properties: that is, if it be, quicke in receyuing, sure in keping, and redie in delivering forthe againe.

3 Φίλομαθής.

4 Φιλόπουος.

Is he, that hath a luft to labor, and a will to take paines. For, if a childe haue all the benefites of nature, with perfection of memorie, loue, like, and praife learning neuer fo moch, yet if he be not of him felfe painfull, he shall neuer attayne vnto it. And yet where loue is present, labor is seldom absent, and namelie in studie of learning, and matters of the mynde: and therfored id Ifocrates rightlie judge, that if his fcholer were φίλομαθής he cared for no more. Aristotle, variing from Isocrates in private affaires of life, but agreing with Ifocrates in common judgement of learning, for loue and labor in learning, is of the fame opinion, vttered in thefe wordes, in his Rhetorike ad Theodecten. Li- 2 Rhet ad bertiekindlethloue: Louerefusethnolabor: Theod. and labor obteyneth what fo euer it feeketh. And yet neuerthelesse, Goodnes of nature may do little good: Perfection of memorie, may ferue to fmall vse: All loue may be employed in vayne: Any labor may be fone graualed, if a man trust alwaies to his own finguler witte, and will not be glad fomtyme to heare, take aduife, and learne of an other: And therfore doth Socrates very notablie adde the fifte note.

5 Φιλήκοος.

He, that is glad to heare and learne of an other. For otherwife, he shall sticke with great troble, where he might go easelie forwarde: and also catche hardlie a verie litle by his owne toyle, whan he might gather quicklie a good deale, by an others mans teaching. But now there be some, that haue great loue to learning, good lust to labor, be willing to learne of others, yet, either of a sonde shamesastness, or else of a proud solie, they dare not, or will not, go to learne of an nother: And therfore doth Socrates wiselie adde the sixte note of a good witte in a childe for learning, and that is.

6 Ζητητῖκός.

He, that is naturallie bold to aske any question, desirous to searche out any dou[b]te, not ashamed to learne of the meanest, not affraide to go to the greatest, vntill he be persitelie taught, and sullie satisfiede. The seuenth and last poynte is.

7 Φιλέπαινος.

He, that loueth to be praifed for well doing, at his father, or masters hand. A childe of this nature, will earnestlie loue learnyng, gladlie labor for learning, willinglie learneof other, boldlie aske any dou[b]te. And thus, by Socrates iudgement, a good father, and a wise scholemaster, shold chose a childe to make a scholer of, that hath by nature, the foresayd persite qualities, and cumlie surniture, both of mynde and bodie, hath memorie, quicke to receyue, sure to keape, and readie to deliuer: hath loue to learning: hath lust to labor: hath desire to learne of others: hath boldnes to aske any question: hath mynde holie bent, to wynne praise by well doing.

The two firste poyntes be speciall benefites of nature: which neuerthelesse, be well preserved, and moch encreased by good order. But as for the five laste, loue, labor, gladnes to learne of others, boldnes to aske dou[b]tes, and will to wynne praise, be wonne and maintened by the onelie wisedome and discretion of the scholemaster. Which since poyntes, whether a scholemaster shall work so[o]ner in a childe, by fearefull beating, or curtese handling, you that be wise, judge.

Yet some men, wise in deede, but in this matter, more by seueritie of nature, than any wisdome at all, do laugh at vs, when we thus wishe and reason, that yong children should rather be allured to learning by ientilnes and loue, than compelled to learning, by beating and seare: They say, our reasons serue onelie to breede forth talke, and passe a waie tyme, but we neuer saw good scholemaster do so, nor neuer red of wise man that thought so.

Yes forfothe: as wife as they be, either in other mens opinion, or in their owne conceite, I will bring the contrarie iudgement of him, who, they them felues shall confesse, was as wife as they are, or else they may be instlie thought to haue small witte at all: and that is Socrates, whose iudgement in Plato is plainlie this in these Plato in 7. wordes: which, bicaufe they be verie notable, de Rep. I will recite them in his owne tonge, ούδεν μάθημα μετα δουλείας χρη μανθάνειν: οι μεν γαρ τοῦ σώματος πόνοι βία πονούμενοι χειρον οὐδέν τὸ σῶμα ἀπερνάξονται; ψυχή δε, βίαιον ουδεν εμμονον μάθημα: in Englishe thus, No learning ought to be learned with bondage: For, bodelie labors, wrought by compulsion, hurt not the bodie: but any learning learned by compulsion, tarieth not long in the mynde: And why? For what foeuer the mynde doth learne vnwillinglie with feare, the fame it doth quicklie forget without care. And lest proude wittes, that loue not to be contraryed, but haue lust to wrangle or trifle away troth, will fay, that Socrates meaneth not this of childrens teaching, but of fom other higher learnyng, heare, what Socrates in the fame place doth more plainlie fay : μη τοίνυν βία; ω άρωτε, τοὺς παίδας έν τοις μαθήμασιν, άλλα παίξοντας τρέφε, that is to fay, and therfore, my deare frend, bring not vp your children in learning by compulsion and feare, but by playing and pleafure. And you, that do read Plato, as ye shold, do well perceiue, that these be no The right Questions asked by Socrates, as doutes, but readyng of they be Sentences, first affirmed by Socrates, as mere trothes, and after, given forth by Socrates, as right Rules, most necessarie to be marked, and fitte to be followed of all them, that would have children taughte. as they should. And in this counfell, iudgement, and authoritie of Socrates I will repose my selfe, vntill I meete with a man of the contrarie mynde, whom I may iustlie take to be wifer, than I thinke Socrates was. Fonde scholemasters, neither can vnderstand, Yong Ientlenor will follow this good counsell of Socrates, but wife ryders, in their office, can and will to ryde, by do both: which is the onelie cause, that common ryders, than commonly, the yong ientlemen of England, to learne, by go fo vnwillinglie to schole, and run fo fast Scholeto the stable: For in verie deede fond scholemasters. masters, by feare, do beate into them, the hatred of learning, and wife riders, by ientle allurementes, do breed vp in them, the loue of riding. They finde feare, and bondage in scholes, They feele libertie and freedome in stables: which caufeth them, vtterlie to abhor[r]e the one, and most gladlie to haunt the other. And I do not write this, that in exhorting to the one, I would diffuade yong ientlemen from the other: yea I am forie, with all my harte, that they be given no more to riding, then they be: For, of all outward qualities, to ride faire, is most cumelie for him felfe, most necessarie for his contrey, and the greater he is in blood, the greater is his praife, the more he doth excesed all other therein. It was one of the three excellent praifes, amongest the noble ientlemen the old Persians, Alwaise to say troth, to ride faire, and shote well: and fo it was engrauen vpon Darius tumbe, as Strabo beareth witnesse. Strabo. 15.

> Darius the king, lieth buried here, Who in riding and shoting had neuer peare.

But, to our purpofe, yong men, by any meanes, leefing the loue of learning, whan by tyme they cum to their owne rule, they carie commonlie, from the fchole with them, a perpetuall hatred of their master, and a continuall contempt of learning. If ten Ientlemen be asked, why they forget so sone in Court, that which they were learning so long in schole, eight of them, or let me be blamed, will laie the fault on their ill handling, by their scholemasters.

Cufpinian doth report, that, that noble Emperor Maximilian, would lament verie oft, his miffortune herein.

Pastime. Yet, fome will fay, that children of nature, loue pastime, and mislike learning:

bicause, in their kinde, the one is easie and pleasant, the other hard and werifon: which is an opinion not fo trewe, as fome men weene: For, the matter lieth not fo much in the disposition of them that be yong, as in the order and maner of bringing vp, by them that be old, nor yet in the difference of learning and pastime. For, beate a child, if he daunce not well, and cherish him, though he learne not well, ye shall have him, vnwilling to go to daunce, and glad to go to his booke. Knocke him alwaies, when he draweth his shaft ill, and fauo[u]r him againe, though he fau[l]t at his booke, ve shall have hym verie loth to be in the field, and verie willing to be in the schole. Yea, I saie more, and not of my felfe, but by the judgement of those, from whom few wifemen will gladlie diffent, that if euer the nature of man be given at any tyme, more than other, to receiue goodnes, it is, in innocencie of yong yeares, before, that experience of euill, haue taken roote in hym. For, the pure cleane witte of a fweete yong babe, is like the newest wax, most hable to receive the best and favrest printing: and like a new bright filuer dishe neuer occupied, to receive and kepe cleane, anie good thyng that is put into it. And thus, will in children, wifelie | Will.)

wrought withall, maie easelie be won to be verie well willing to learne. And witte in children, by nature, namelie witte memorie, the onely keie and keper of all learning, is readiest to receiue, and surest to kepe anie maner of thing, that is learned in yought: This, lewde and learned, by common experience, know to be most trewe. For we remember nothyng so well when we be olde, as those things which we learned when we were yong: And this is not straunge, but common in all natures workes. Euery man sees, (as I sayd before) new wax is best for printyng: new aptest for claie, fittest for working: new shorne wo[o]ll, aptest for sone and surest dying: new fresh slesh, for good and durable salting. And this similitude is not rude, nor borowed of the larder house, but out of his scholehouse, of whom, the wisest of England, neede not be ashamed to learne. Yong Grastes grow not onelie sonest, but also sairest, and bring alwayes forth the best and sweetest srute: yong whelpes learne easelie to carie: yong Popingeis learne quicklie to speake: And so, to be short, if in all other thinges, though they lacke reason, sens, and life, the similitude of youth is sittest to all goodnesse, surelie nature, in mankinde, is most beneficiall and effectuall in this behalfe.

Therfore, if to the goodnes of nature, be ioyned the wisedome of the teacher, in leading yong wittes into a right and plaine waie of learnyng, furelie, children, kept vp in Gods seare, and gouerned by his grace, maie most easelie be brought well to serve God, and contrey both by vertue and wifedome.

But if will, and witte, by farder age, be once allured from innocencie, delited in vaine fightes, fil[1]ed with foull taulke, crooked with wilfulnesse, hardned with stubburnesse, and let louse to disobedience, surelie it is hard with ientlenesse, but vnpossible with seuere crueltie, to call them backe to good frame againe. For, where the one, perchance maie bend it, the other shall surelie breake it: and so in stead of some hope, leaue an assured desperation, and shamelesse contempt of all xen. 1. Cyri goodnesse, the fardest pointe in all mischies, as Xenophon doth most trewlie and most wittelie marke.

Therfore, to loue or to hate, to like or contemne, to plie this waie or that waie to good or to bad, ye shall haue as ye vse a child in his youth.

And one example, whether loue or feare doth worke more in a child, for vertue and learning, I will gladlie report: which maie be h[e]ard with fome pleafure, and folowed with more profit. Before I went into Germanie, I came to Brodegate in Le[i]cestershire, to take Eady Iane my leaue of that noble Ladie Iane Grey, to Grey. whom I was exceeding moch beholdinge. Hir parentes, the Duke and Duches, with all the houshold, Gentlemen and Gentlewomen, were huntinge in the Parke: I founde her, in her Chamber, readinge Phadon Platonis in Greeke, and that with as moch delite, as fom ientlemen wold read a merie tale in Bocafe. After falutation, and dewtie done, with fom other taulke, I asked hir, whie she wold leese soch pastime in the Parke? smiling she answered me: I wiffe, all their sporte in the Parke is but a shadoe to that pleasure, that I find in Plato: Alas good folke, they neuer felt, what trewe pleasure ment. And howe came you Madame, quoth I, to this deepe knowledge of pleasure, and what did chieslie allure you vnto it: feinge, not many women, but verie fewe men haue atteined thereunto. I will tell you, quoth she, and tell you a troth, which perchance ye will meruell at. One of the greatest benefites, that euer God gaue me, is, that he fent me fo sharpe and seuere Parentes, and fo ientle a scholemaster. For when I am in presence either of father or mother, whether I speake, kepe filence, fit, fland, or go, eate, drinke, be merie, or fad, be fowyng, plaiving, dauncing, or doing anie thing els, I must do it, as it were, in soch weight, mesure, and number, euen fo perfitelie, as God made the world, or elfe I am fo sharplie taunted, fo cruellie threatened, yea presentlie some tymes, with pinches, nippes, and bobbes, and other waies, which I will not name, for the honor I beare them, fo without measure misordered, that I thinke my felfe in hell, till tyme cum, that I must go to M. Elmer, who teacheth me so ientlie, so pleafantlie, with foch faire allurementes to learning, that I thinke all the tyme nothing, whiles I am with him. And when I am called from him, I fall on weeping, because, what soeuer I do els, but learning, is ful of grief, trouble, feare, and whole misliking vnto me: And thus my booke, hath bene fo moch my pleafure, and bringeth dayly to me more pleafure and more, that in respect of it, all other pleasures, in very deede, be but trifles and troubles vnto me. I remember this talke gladly, both bicaufe it is fo worthy of memorie, and bicause also, it was the last talke that euer I had, and the last tyme, that euer I saw that noble and worthie Ladie.

I could be ouer long, both in shewinge iust causes, and in recitinge trewe examples, why learning shold be taught, rather by loue than seare. He that wold see a persite discourse of it, let him read that learned sturmius.

treatese, which my frende Ioan. Sturmius de Inst. Princ. wrote de institutione Principis, to the Duke of Cleues.

The godlie counsels of Salomon and Iefus the sonne of Sirach, for sharpe kepinge in, and bridleinge of youth, are ment rather, for satherlie correction, then masterlie beating, rather for maners, than for learninge: for other places, than for scholes. For God sorbid, but all euill touches, wantonnes, lyinge, pickinge, slouthe, will, stubburnnesse, and disobedience, shold be with sharpe chastise-ment, daily cut away.

This discipline was well knowen, and diligentlie vsed, among the Gracians, and old Romanes, as doth appeare in Aristophanes, Ifocrates, and Plato, and also in the Comedies of Plautus: where we fee that children were vnder the rule of three persones: Pracepr. Scholemaster. tore, Pædagogo, Parente: the scholemaster taught him learnyng withall ientlenes: the Gouernour corrected his maners, with 3. Father. moch sharpenesse: The father, held the sterne of his whole obedience: And fo, he that vied to teache, did not commonlie vse to beate, but remitted that ouer to an other mans charge. But what shall we faie, when now in our dayes, the scholemaster is vsed, both for Praceptor in learning, and Padagogus in Surelie, I wold he shold not confound their offices, but discretelie vse the dewtie of both so, that neither ill touches shold be lest vnpunished, nor ientle[ne]ffe in teaching anie wife omitted. shall well do both, if wifelie he do appointe diuersitie of tyme, and separate place, for either purpose: vsing alwaife foch discrete moderation, as the The schole-scholehouse should be counted a fanctuarie against feare: and verie well learning, a common perdon for ill doing, if the sault, of it selse be not ouer heinous.

And thus the children, kept vp in Gods feare, and preferued by his grace, finding paine in ill doing, and pleasure in well studiyng, shold easelie be brought to honestie of life, and persitenes of learning, the onesie marke, that good and wife sathers do wishe and labour, that their children, shold most buselie, and carefullie shot at.

There is an other discommoditie, besides crueltie in scholemasters in beating away the loue Youth of of learning from children, which hindreth England brought vp learning and vertue, and good bringing vp of youth, and namelie yong ientlemen, libertie. verie moch in England. This fault is cleane contrary to the first. I wished before, to have love of learning bred vp in children: I wishe as moch now, to have yong men brought vp in good order of liuing, and in fome more feuere discipline, then commonlie they be. We have lacke in England of foch good order, as the old noble Persians so carefullie vsed: Xen. 7 Cyri whose children, to the age of xxi. yeare, Ped. were brought vp in learning, and exercises of labor, and that in foch place, where they should, neither see that was vncumlie, nor heare that was vnhonest. Yea, a vong ientlemen was neuer free, to go where he would, and do what he lifte him felf, but vnder the kepe, and by the counfell, of fome graue gouernour, vntill he was, either maryed, or callleld to beare some office in the common wealth.

And fee the great obedience, that was vsed in old tyme to fathers and gouernours. No sonne, were he neuer so old of yeares, neuer so great of birth, though he were a kynges sonne, might not mary, [might marry] but by his sather and mothers also consent. Cyrus the great, after he had conquered Babylon, and subdewed

Riche king Cræfus with whole Asia minor, cummyng tryumphantlie home, his vncle Cyaxeris offered him his daughter to wife. Cyrus thanked his vncle, and praifed the maide, but for mariage he answered him with thies wife and sweete wordes, as they be vttered Xen. 8. Cyri by Xenophon, ω κυαξάρη, τό τε γένος Ped. ἐπαινῶ καὶ τὴν παίδα καὶ τὰ δῶρα βούλομαι δέ, ἔφη, σὺν τῷ τοῦ πατρὸς γνώμη καὶ τῷ τῆς μητρὸς ταῦτά σοι συναινέσαι, &c., that is to say: Vncle Cyaxeris, I commend the stocke, I like the maide, and I allow well the dowrie, but (fayth he) by the counsell and confent of my father and mother, I will determine farther of thies matters.

Strong Samfon also in Scripture saw a maide that liked him, but he fpake not to hir, but went home to his father, and his mother, and defired both father and mother to make the mariage for him. Doth this modestie, doth this obedience, that was in great kyng Cyrus, and stoute Samfon, remaine in our yongmen at this daie? no furelie: For we liue not longer after them by tyme, than we liue farre different from them by good order. Our tyme is fo farre from that old discipline and obedience, as now, not onelie yong ientlemen, but euen verie girles dare without all feare, though not without open shame, where they list, and how they lift, marie them felues in spite of father, mother, God, good order, and all. The caufe of this euill is, that youth is least looked vnto, when they stand [in] most neede of good kepe and regard. It auaileth not, to fee them well taught in yong yeares, and after whan they cum to lust and youthfull dayes, to giue them licence to liue as they lust them selues. For, if ye fuffer the eye of a yong Ientleman, once to be entangled with vaine fightes, and the eare to be corrupted with fond or filthie taulke, the mynde shall quicklie fall feick, and fone vomet and cast vp, all the holefome doctrine, that he received in childhoode, though he were neuer fo well brought vp before. And being ons [once] inglutted with vanitie, he will streight way loth all learning, and all good counfell to the fame. And the parentes for all their great cost and charge, reape onelie in the end, the fru[i]te of grief and care.

This euill, is not common to poore men, as God will haue it, but proper to riche and great mens children, as they deferue brought vp.

In deede from feuen, to feuentene, yong ientlemen commonlie be carefullie enough brought vp: But from feuentene to feuen and twentie (the most dangerous tyme of all a mans life, and most slipperie to stay well in) they have commonlie the reigne of all licens in their owne hand, and speciallie foch as Wise men fond do liue in the Court. And that which is fathers. most to be merueled at, commonlie, the wifest and also best men, be found the fondest fathers in this behalfe. And if fom good father wold feick fome remedie herein, yet the mother (if the house hold of our Lady) had rather, yea, and will to, haue her fonne cunnyng and bold, in making him to lyue trimlie when he is yong, than by learning and trauell, to be able to ferue his Prince and his contrie, both wifelie in peace, and floutelie in warre, whan he is old.

The fault is in your felues, ye noble men[s] fonnes, and therefore ye deferue the greater blame, that commonlie, the meaner mens children, cum to be, the wifest councellours, and greatest doers, in the weightie affaires of this Realme. And why? for God will haue it so, of his prouidence: bicause ye will haue it no otherwise, by your negligence.

And God is a good God, and wifest in all his doinges, that will place vertue, and displace vice, Nobilitie within those kingdomes, where he doth go-out wisedome. Under the knoweth, that Nobilitie, without vertue and wisedome, is bloud in deede, but bloud trewelie, without bones and sinewes: and so of it selfe, without the other, verie weeke to beare the burden of weightie assaires.

The greatest shippe in deede commonlie carieth the greatest burden, but yet alwayes with the greatest ieoperdie, not onelie for the persons and goodes comnobilitie with mitted vnto it, but euen for the shyppe it wisedome. felse, except it be gouerned, with the greater wisdome.

But Nobilitie, gouerned by learning and wisedome,

Wisedome.
Nobilite with

Wisedome.

Is in deede, most like a faire shippe, hauyng tide and winde at will, vnder the reule of a skilfull master: whan contrarie wise, a shippe, carried, yea with the hiest tide and greatest winde, lacking a skilfull master, most commonlie, doth either, finck it selfe vpon sandes, or breake it selfe vpon rockes. And euen so, how manie

Vaine pleasure, and stoute wilfulnes, two greatest enemies to Nobilitie.

haue bene, either drowned in vaine pleasure, or ouerwhelmed by stout wilfulnesse, the histories of England be able to affourde ouer many examples vnto vs. Therfore, ye great and noble mens children, if ye will haue rightfullie that praife, and enioie furelie that place, which your fathers haue, and elders had, and left vnto you, ye must kepe it, as they gat it, and that is, by the onelie waie, of vertue, wisedome and worthinesse.

For wisedom, and vertue, there be manie faire examples in this Court, for yong Ientlemen to so [1] low. But they be, like faire markes in the feild, out of a mans reach, to far of, to shote at well. The best and worthiest men, in deede, be sontimes seen, but seldom taulked withall: A yong Ientleman, may somtime knele to their person, smallie vse their companie, for their better instruction.

But yong Ientlemen are faine commonlie to do in the Court, as yong Archers do in the feild: that is to take foch markes, as be nie them, although they be III companie neuer fo foule to shote at. I meene, they marreth youth be driven to kepe companie with the worste: and what force ill companie hath, to corrupt good wittes, the wifest men know best.

And not ill companie onelie, but the ill opinion also of the most part, doth moch harme, and The Court namelie of those, which shold be wise in the trewe decyphring, of the good disposition of nature, of cumlinesse in Courtlie maners, and all right doinges of men.

But error and phantasie, do commonlie occupie, the place of troth and iudgement. For, if a yong ientleman, be demeure and still of nature, they say, he is simple and lacketh witte: if he be bashefull, and will soone blushe, they call him a babishe and ill brought vp thyng, when Xenophon doth preciselie Xen. in I. note in Cyrus, that his bashfulnes in youth, Cyr. Pad. was ye verie trewe signe of his vertue and stoutnes after: If he be innocent and ignorant of ill, they say, he is rude, and hath no grace, so vngraci- The Grace ouslie do som gracelesse men, misuse the in Courte.

faire and godlie word GRACE.

But if ye would know, what grace they meene, go, and looke, and learne emonges them, and ye shall fee that it is: First, to blush at nothing. And blushyng in youth, fayth Aristotle is nothyng els, but seare to do ill: which feare beyng once luftely fraid away from youth, then followeth, to dare do any Grace of Courte. mischief, to contemne stoutly any goodnesse, to be busie in euery matter, to be skilfull in euery thyng, to acknowledge no ignorance at all. To do thus in Court, is counted of fome, the chief and greatest grace of all: and termed by the name of a vertue, called Corage and boldnesse, whan Crassus in Cic. 3. de Or. Cicero teacheth the cleane contrarie, and that most wittelie, faying thus: Audere, cum bonis Boldnes, yea in etiam rebus coniunclum, per feipfum est a good matter, not to be magnopere fugiendum. Which is to fay, to praised. be bold, yea in a good matter, is for it felf, greatlie to be exchewed.

fom mens doinges were not thus. I write not to hurte any but to proffit fom: to accuse none, but to monish foch who, allured by ill counfell, and following ill example, contrarie to their good bringing vp, and against their owne good nature, 111 veld ouermoch to thies folies and faultes: I know many feruing men, of good order, Company. and well staide: And againe, I heare faie, there be fom feruing men do but ill feruice to their yong masters. But I meruell the lesse, that thies misorders be emonges som in the Court, for commonlie Misorders in in the contrie also euerie where, innocencie the countrey. is gone: Bashfulnesse is banished: moch presumption in yougthe: small authoritie in aige: Reuerence is neglected: dewties be consounded: and to be shorte, disobedience doth ouerslowe the bankes of good order, almoste in euerie place, almoste in euerie degree of man.

Meane men haue eies to fee, and cause to lament, and occasion to complaine of thies miseries: but other haue authoritie to remedie them, and will do so to, whan God shall think time fitte. For, all thies misorders, be Goddes iuste plages, by his sufferance, brought iustelie vpon vs, for our sinnes, which be infinite in nomber, and horrible in deede, but namelie, for the kindnesse? euen fuch vnkindnesse as was in the Iewes, in contemninge Goddes voice, in shrinking from his woorde, in wishing backe againe for Ægypt, in committing aduoultrie and hordom, not with the women, but with the doctrine of Babylon, did bring all the plages, destructions, and Captiuities, that fell so ofte and horriblie, vpon Israell.

We have cause also in England to beware of vnkindnesse, who have had, in so fewe yeares, the Candel of Goddes worde, so ost lightned, so oft put out, and yet will poctrina venture by our vnthankfulnesse in doctrine Mores. and sinfull life, to leese againe, lighte, Candle, Candlesticke and all.

God kepe vs in his feare, God grafte in vs the trewe knowledge of his woorde, with a forward will to folowe it, and fo to bring forth the fweete fruites of it, and then shall he preserve vs by his Grace, from all maner of terrible dayes.

The remedie of this, doth not stand onelie, in makPublica Leges. ing good common lawes for the hole

Therefore, if wise fathers, be not as well ware in Ignoratio weeding from their Children ill thinges, and ill companie, as they were before, in graftinge in them learninge, and prouiding for them good scholemasters, what frute, they shall reape of all their coste and care, common experience doth tell.

Here is the place, in youghne is the time whan fom ignorance is as necessarily, as moch knowledge. ledge: and not in matters of our dewtie towardes God, as fom wilful wittes willinglie against their owne knowledge, perniciouslie againste their owne conscience, haue of late openlie taught. In deede S. Chrysostome, that noble and Chrisost. de eloquent Doctor, in a sermon contra fatum, Fato. and the curious serchinge of natiuities, doth wiselie saie, that ignorance therein, is better than knowledge: But to wring this sentence, to wreste thereby out of mens handes, the knowledge of Goddes doctrine, is without all reason, against common sence, contrarie to the iudgement also of them, which be the discretest men, and best learned, on their own side. I know, sullanus Apostata did so, but I neuer hard or sulia. Apostat. red, that any auncyent sather of the primitiue chirch, either thought or wrote so.

But this ignorance in youghte, which I Innocency in spake on, or rather this simplicitie, or most youth. Trewlie, this innocencie, is that, which the noble Persians, as wife Xenophon doth testifie, were so carefull, to breede vp their yought in. But Christian sathers commonlie do not so. And I will tell you a tale, as moch to be missiked, as the Persians example is to be folowed.

This last fomer, I was in a Ientlemans house: where a vong childe, fomewhat past fower yeare A childe ill olde, cold in no wife frame his tonge, to brought vp. faie, a litle shorte grace: and yet he could roundlie rap out, fo manie vgle othes, and those of the newest facion, as fom good man of fourescore yeare olde hath neuer hard named before: and that which was most detestable of all, his father and mother III Parentes. wold laughe at it. I moche doubte, what comforte, an other daie, this childe shall bring vnto them. This Childe vfing moche the companie of feruinge men, and geuing good eare to their taulke, did easelie learne, which he shall hardlie forget, all [the] daies of his life hereafter: So likewife, in the Courte, if a yong Ientleman will ventur[e] him felf into the companie of Ruffians, it is ouer greate a ieopardie, lest, their facions, maners, thoughtes, taulke, and deedes, will verie fone, be euer like. The confounding of companies, breedeth conIll companie. fusion of good maners both in the Courte, and euerie where else.

And it maie be a great wonder, but a greater shame, to vs Christian men, to vnderstand, what a heithen socrates. writer, Ifocrates, doth leave in memorie of writing, concerning the care, that the noble Citie of Athens had, to bring vp their youghte, in honest companie, and vertuous discipline, whose taulke in Greke, is, to this effect, in Englishe.

"The Citie, was not more carefull, to fee their Chil-"dren well taughte, than to fee their yong "men well gouerned: which they brought "to passe, not so much by common lawe, as by private "discipline. For, they had more regard, that their "yougthe, by good order shold not offend, than how, "by lawe, they might be punished: And if offense "were committed, there was, neither waie to hide it, "neither hope of pardon for it. Good natures, were "not fo moche openlie praised as they were secretlie " marked, and watchfullie regarded, left they should "leafe the goodnes they had. Therefore in scholes of "finging and dauncing, and other honest exercises, "gouernours were appointed, more diligent to ouerfee "their good maners, than their masters were, to teach "them anie learning. It was fom fhame to a yong "man, to be feene in the open market: and if for "businesse, he passed throughe it, he did it, with a "meruelous modestie, and bashefull facion. To eate, " or drinke in a Tauerne, was not onelie a shame, but "also punishable, in a yong man. To contrarie, or to "fland in termes with an old man, was more heinous, "than in fom place, to rebuke and fcolde with his "owne father: with manie other mo good orders, and faire disciplines, which I referre to their reading, that haue lust to looke vpon the description of such a worthie common welthe.

Good sede, And to know, what worthie frute, did worthie frute. fpring of foch worthie feade, I will tell yow the most meruell of all, and yet foch a trothe, as no man shall denie it, except such as be ignorant in knowledge of the best stories.

Athens, by this discipline and good ordering of youghte, did breede vp, within the circu[i]te Athenes. of that one Citie, within the compas of one hondred yeare, within the memorie of one mans life, so manie notable Capitaines in warre, for worthinesse, wisdome and learning, as be scarse matchable no Roma. not in the state of Rome, in the compas of those seauen hondred yeares, whan it slorished moste.

And bicause, I will not onelie saie it, but also proue it, the names of them be these. Miltiades, The noble Capitaines of Alcybiades, Thrasybulus, Conon, Iphicrates, Xenophon, Timotheus, Theopompus, Demetrius, and diuers other mo: of which euerie one, maie iustelie be spoken that worthie praise, which was geuen to Scipio Africanus, who, Cicero douteth, whether he were, more noble Capitaine in warre, or more eloquent and wise councelor in peace. And if ye beleue not me, read diligentlie, Æmilius Probus in Latin, and Æmil. Probus.

Plutarche in Greke, which two, had no Plutarchus.
cause either to slatter or lie vpon anie of those which I haue recited.

And beside nobilitie in warre, for excellent and matchles masters in all maner of learninge, The learned of in that one Citie, in memorie of one aige, Were mo learned men, and that in a maner altogether, than all tyme doth remember, than all place doth affourde, than all other tonges do conteine. And I do not meene of those Authors, which, by iniurie of tyme, by negligence of men, by crueltie of sier and sworde, be lost, but euen of those, which by Goddes grace, are lest yet vnto us: of which I thank God, euen my poor studie lacketh not one. As, in Philosophie, Plato, Aristotle, Xenophon, Euclide, and Theophrast: In eloquens and Ciuill lawe, Demosthenes, Eschines, Lycurgus, Dinarchus, Demades, Isocrates, Ifaus, Lysias, Antisthenes, Andocides: In histories, He rodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon: and which we lacke, to our great loffe, Theopombus and Eph [orus]: In Poetrie, Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Aristophanes, and somewhat of Menander, Demosthenes fifter[s] fonne.

Now, let Italian, and Latin it felf, Spanishe, French, Douch, and Englishe bring forth their lern-Learnyng, chiefly con-teined in the ing, and recite their Authors, Cicero onelie excepted, and in one or two moe in Latin, Greke, and in they be all patched cloutes and ragges, in comparison of faire wouen broade cloathes. And trewelie, if there be any good in them, it is either lerned, borowed, or stolne, from some one of those worthie wittes of Athens.

The remembrance of foch a common welthe, vling foch discipline and order for yougthe, and thereby bringing forth to their praise, and leauing to vs for our example, such Capitaines for warre, soch Councelors for peace, and matcheles mafters, for all kinde of learninge, is pleafant for me to recite, and not irkfum, I trust, for other to heare, except it be foch, as make neither counte of vertue nor learninge.

And whether, there be anie foch or no, I can not Contempers of well tell: yet I heare faie, fome yong Ientlemen of oures, count it their shame to be counted learned: and perchance, they count it their shame, to be counted honest also, for I heare faie, they medle as litle with the one, as with the other. A meruelous case, that Ientlemen shold so be ashamed of good learning, and neuer a whit ashamed of ill maners: Ientlemen of foch do laie for them, that the Ientlemen of France do fo: which is a lie, as God will have it. Langaus, and Bellaus that be dead, and the noble Vidam of Chartes, that is aliue, and infinite mo in France, which I heare tell of, proue this to be most false. And though som, in France, which will nedes be Ientlemen, whether men will or no, and haue more ientleshipe in their hat, than in their hed, be at deedlie feude, with both learning and honestie, yet I beleue, if that noble Prince, king Francis the first were aliue, they shold haue, neither place in his Courte, nor pension in his warres, if he had knowledg of them. This opinion is not French, but plaine Turckishe: from whens, som French fetche moe faultes, than this: which, I praie God, kepe out of England, and fend also those of oures better mindes, which bend them felues againste vertue and learninge, to the contempte of God, dishonor of their contrie, to the hurt of manie others, and at length, to the greatest harme, and vtter destruction of themselues.

Some other, hauing better nature, but leffe witte, (for ill commonlie, haue ouer moch witte) do not vtterlie difpraise learning, but they faie, that without learning, common experience, knowledge of all facions, and haunting all companies, shall worke in yougthe, both wisdome, and habilitie, to execute anie weightie affaire. Surelie long experience doth proffet moch, but moste, and almost onelie to him (if we meene honest affaires) that is diligentlie before instructed with preceptes of well doinge. For good precepts of learning, be the eyes of the minde, to looke wifelie before a man, which waie to go right, and which not.

Learning teacheth more in one yeare Learning. than experience in twentie: And learning Experience. teacheth fafelie, when experience maketh mo miferable then wife. He hasardeth fore, that waxeth wife by experience. An vnhappie Master he is, that is made cunning by manie shippe wrakes: A miserable merchant, that is neither riche or wise, but after som bankroutes. It is costlie wisdom, that is bought by experience. We know by experience it selfe, that it is a meruelous paine, to finde oute but a snort waie, by long wandering. And surelie, he that wold proue wise by experience, he maie be wittie in deede, but euen like a swift runner, that runneth sast out of his waie, and vpon the night, he knoweth not whither. And verilie they be sewest of number, that be happie or wife by vnlearned experience. And looke well vpon the former life of those sewe, whether your example be old or yonge, who without learning haue gathered, by long experience, a litle wisdom, and som happines: and whan you do consider, what mischeise they haue committed, what dangers they haue escaped (and yet xx. for one, do perishe in the aduenture) than thinke well with your selfe, whether ye wold, that your owne son, should cum to wisdom and happines, by the waie of foch experience or no.

It is a notable tale, that old Syr Roger Syr Roger Chamloe. Chamloe, fometime cheife Iustice, wold tell of him felfe. When he was Auncient in Inne of Courte. certaine yong Ientlemen were brought before him, to be corrected for certaine miforders: And one of the lustiest faide: Syr, we be yong ientlemen, and wife men before vs, haue proued all facions, and yet those haue done full well: this they faid, because it was well knowen, that Syr Roger had bene a good feloe in his yougth. But he aunswered them verie wiselie. deede faith he, in yougthe, I was, as you ar[e] now: and I had twelue feloes like vnto my felf, but not one of them came to a good ende. And therfore, follow not my example in yougth, but follow my councell in aige. if euer ye thinke to cum to this place, or to thies yeares, that I am cum vnto, lesse ye meete either with pouertie or Tiburn in the way.

Experience. Thus, experience of all facions in youghhe, beinge, in profe, alwaife daungerous, in iffhue, feldom lucklie, is a waie, in deede, to ouermoch knowledge, yet vfed commonlie of foch men, which be either caried by fom curious affection of mynde, or driven by fom hard necessitie of life, to hafard the triall of ouer manie perilous aduentures.

Exasmus. Erasmus the honour of learning of all oure time, faide wifelie that experience is the common fcholehouse of foles, and ill men: Men, of witte and honestie, be otherwise instructed. For there be, that kepe them out of fier.

and yet was neuer burned: That beware of water, and yet was neuer nie drowninge: That hate harlottes, and was neuer at the stewes: That abhorre falshode, and neuer brake promis themselues.

But will ye fee, a fit Similitude of this aduentured experience. A Father, that doth let louse his son, to all experiences, is most like a fond Hunter, that letteth slippe a whelpe to the hole herde. Twentie to one, he shall fall vpon a rascall, and let go the saire game. Men that hunt so, be either ignorant persones, preuie stealers, or night walkers.

Learning therefore, ye wife fathers, and good bringing vp, and not blinde and dangerous experience, is the next and readiest waie, that must leede your Children, first, to wisdom, and than to worthinesse, if euer ye purpose they shall cum there.

And to faie all in shorte, though I lacke How experience may proffet. good will to wisshe, that the youghhe in England, speciallie Ientlemen, and namelie nobilitie, shold be by good bringing vp, so grounded in judgement of learninge, so founded in loue of honestie, as, whan they sho[u]ld be called forthe to the execution of great affaires, in service of their Prince and co[u]ntrie, they might be hable, to vse and to order, all experiences, were they good were they bad, and that, according to the square, rule, and line, of wissom, learning, and vertue.

And, I do not meene, by all this my taulke, that yong Ientlemen, should alwaies be poring on a booke, and by vsing good studies, shold lease honest pleasure, and haunt no good pastime, I meene nothing lesse: For it is well knowne, that I both like and loue, and haue alwaies, and do yet still vse, all exercises and pastimes, that be sitte for my nature and habilitie. And beside naturall disposition, in iudgement, also, I was neuer, either Stoick in doctrine, or Anabaptis in Religion to mislike a merie, pleasant, and plaifull nature, if no outrage be committed,

against lawe, me a fure, and good order.

Therefore, I wolulld wishe, that, beside some good time, fitlie appointed, and constantlie kepte, to encrease by readinge, the knowledge of the tonges and learning, yong ientlemen shold vse, and delite in all Courtelie exercifes, and Ientlemanlike pastimes. Learnyng ioyned with And good cause whie: For the self same noble Citie of Athenes, iustlie commended pastimes. of me before, did wiselie and vpon great consideration, appoint, the Mufes, Apollo, and Pallas, to be patrones of learninge to their yougthe. For the Musæ. Muses, besides learning, were also Ladies of dauncinge, mirthe and ministrelsie: Apollo, was god of shooting, and Author of cunning playing vpon Instrumentes: Pallas also was Laidie mistres in Wherbie was nothing elfe ment, but that warres. learninge shold be alwaife mingled, with honest mirthe, and cumlie exercifes: and that warre also shold be gouerned by learning, and moderated by wifdom, as did well appeare in those Capitaines of Athenes named by me before, and also in Scipio and Cafar the two Diamondes of Rome.

And Pallas, was no more feared, in weering Ægida,

Learning rewleth both warre and peace.

than she was praifed, for chosing Oliua: whereby shineth the glory of learning, which thus, was Gouernour and Mistres, in the noble Citie of Athenes, both of warre and peace.

Therefore, to ride cumlie: to run faire at the tilte or ring: to plaie at all weapones: to shote faire in bow, or surelie in gon: to vaut lustely: to runne: to the pastimes leape: to wrestle: to swimme: To daunce that be fitte for cumlie: to sing, and playe of instrumentes lentlemen. cunnyngly: to Hawke: to hunte: to playe at tennes, and all pastimes generally, which be ioyned with labor, vsed in open place, and on the day light, conteining either some fitte exercise for warre, or some pleasant pastime for peace, be not onelie cumlie and decent, but also verie necessarie, for a Courtlie Ientleman to vse.

But, of all kinde of pastimes, fitte for a Ientleman, I will, godwilling, in fitter place, more at large, declare fullie, in my booke of the Cockpitte: which The Cokpitte. I do write, to satisfie som, I trust, with som reason, that be more curious, in marking other mens doinges, than carefull in mendyng their owne saultes. And som also will nedes buse them selues in merueling, and adding thereunto vnsrendlie taulke, why I, a man of good yeares, and of no ill place, I thanke God and my Prince, do make choise to spend soch tyme in writyng of trisles, as the schole of shoting, the Cockpitte, and this booke of the first Principles of Grammer, rather, than to take some weightie matter in hand, either of Religion, or Ciuill discipline.

Wife men I know, will well allow of my choife herein: and as for fuch, who have not witte of them felues, but must learne of others, to judge right of mens doynges, let them read that wife Poet A booke of Horace in his Arte Poetica, who willeth wifemen to beware, of hie and lostie Titles.

For, great shippes, require costlie tackling, and also afterward dangerous gouernment: Small boates, be neither verie chargeable in makyng, nor verie oft in great ieoperdie: and yet they cary many tymes, as good and costlie ware, as greater vessels do. A meane Argument, may easelie beare, the light the right burden of a small saute, and haue alwaise choise, to chose a sitte Argument at hand, a ready excuse for ill handling: to write vpon. And, some praise it is, if it so chaunce, to be better in deede, than a man dare venture to seeme. A hye title, doth charge a man, with the heavie burden, of to great a promise: and therefore sayth Horace verie wittelie, that, that Poete was a verie soole, Hor. in Arte that began hys booke, with a goodlie verse Poet.

in deede, but ouer proude a promise.

Homers wisdom Meening Homer, who, within the compasse in choice of his of a fmal Argument, of one harlot, and of one good wife, did vtter so much learning in all kinde of sciences, as, by the iudgement of Quintilian, he descruet so hie a praise, that no man yet descrued to sit in the second degree beneth him. And thus moch out of my way, concerning my purpose in spending penne, and paper, and tyme, vpon trisles, and namelie to aunswere some, that have neither witte nor learning, to do any thyng them selves, neither will nor honestie, to fay well of other.

To ioyne learnyng with cumlie exercifes, Conto The Cortegian, Baldefær Castiglione in his booke, Coran excellent tegiane, doth trimlie teache: which booke, aduifedlie read, and diligentlie followed, but one yeare at home in England, would do a yong ientleman more good, I wiffe, then three yeares trauell abrode spent in Italie. And I meruell this booke, is no more read in the Court, than it is, seyng it is so well translated into English by a worthie Ientleman Syr Tho.

Syr Tho. Syr Th. Hobbie, who was many wayes well furnished with learnyng, and very expert in knowledge of divers tonges.

And befide good preceptes in bookes, in all kinde of tonges, this Court also neuer lacked many faire examples, for yong ientlemen to folow: And furelie, one example, is more valiable, both to good and ill, than xx. preceptes written in bookes: and so Plato, not in one or two, but diuerse places, doth plainlie teach.

King Ed. 6. If kyng Edward had liued a litle longer, his onely example had breed foch a rafe of worthie learned ientlemen, as this Realme neuer yet did affourde.

And, in the fecond degree, two noble Primerofes of The yong Duke of Suffolke, and Lord H. Matreuers, were foch two examples to the Court for learning, as our tyme may rather wishe than looke for again.

At Cambrige also, in S. Iohns Colledge, in my tyme, I do know, that, not so much the good statutes, as two Ientlemen, of worthie memorie Syr Syr Yohn Iohn Cheke, and Doctour Readman, by Cheke. their onely example of excellency in learning, of godnes in liuvng, of diligence in studying, of councell in exhorting, of [by] good order in all thyng, D. Readman. did breed vp, so many learned men, in that one College of S. Iohns, at one time, as I beleue, the whole Vniuersitie of Louaine, in many yeares, was neuer able to affourd.

Present examples of this present tyme, I list not to the touch: yet there is one example, for all Queene Ientlemen of this Court to fol[1]ow, that Elisabeth. may well fatisfie them, or nothing will serue them, nor no example moue them, to goodnes and learning.

It is your shame, (I speake to you all, you yong lentlemen of England) that one mayd[e] should go beyond you all, in excellencie of learning, and knowledge of divers tonges. Pointe forth fix of the best given Ientlemen of this Court, and all they together, shew not fo much good will, fpend not fo much tyme, bestow not so many houres, dayly, orderly, and con-flantly, for the increase of learning and knowledge, as doth the Queenes Maiestie her selfe. Yea I beleue, that beside her persit readines, in Latin, Italian, French, and Spanish, she readeth here now at Windsore more Greeke euery day, than fome Prebendarie of this Chirch doth read Latin in a whole weeke. And that which is most praise worthie of all, within the walles of her privile chamber, she hath obteyned that excellencie of learnyng, to vnderstand, speake, and write, both wittely with head, and faire with hand, as scarce one or two rare wittes in both the Vniuersities haue in many yeares reached vnto. Amongest all the benefites yat God hath blessed me with all, next the knowledge of Christes true Religion, I counte this the greatest, that it pleased God to call me, to be one poore minister in settyng for ward these excellent giftes of learnyng in this most excellent Prince. Whose onely example, if the rest of our nobilitie would folow, than might EngIII Examples land be, for learnyng and wisedome in nobilitie, a spectacle to all the world examples. But see the mishap of men: The best examples have never such forse to move to any goodnes, as the bad, vaine, light and fond, have to all ilnes.

And one example, though out of the compas of learning, yet not out of the order of good maners, was notable in this Courte, not fullie xxiiij. yeares a go, when all the actes of Parlament, many good Proclamations, diuerfe strait commaundementes, fore punishment openlie, speciall regarde privatelie, cold not do so moch to take away one misorder, as the example of one big one of this Courte did, still to kepe up the same: The memorie whereof, doth yet remaine, in a common proverbe of Birching lane.

Take hede therfore, ye great ones in ye Court, yea though ve be ve greatest of all, take hede, Great men in what ye do, take hede how ye liue. Court, by their example, make or marre, all as you great ones vse to do, fo all meane men loue to do. You be in deed, makers other mens maners. or marrers, of all mens maners within the For though God hath placed yow, to be cheife in making of lawes, to beare greatest authoritie, to commaund all others: yet God doth order, that all your lawes, all your authoritie, all your commaundementes, do not halfe fo moch with meane men, as doth your example and maner of livinge. And Example in for example euen in the greatest matter, if yow your felues do ferue God gladlie and orderlie for conscience sake, not coldlie, and somtyme for maner fake, you carie all the Courte with yow, and the whole Realme beside, earnestlie and orderlie to do the fame. If yow do otherwise, yow be the onelie authors, of all miforders in Religion, not onelie to the Courte, but to all England beside. Infinite shall be made cold in Religion by your example, that neuer were hurt by reading of bookes.

And in meaner matters, if three or foure great ones in Courte, will nedes outrage in apparell, Example in huge hofe, in monft[e]rous hattes, in apparell. gaurishe colers, let the Prince Proclame, make Lawes, order, punishe, commaunde euerie gate in London dailie to be watched, let all good men beside do euerie where what they can, furelie the miforder of apparell in mean men abrode, shall neuer be amended, except the greatest in Courte will order and mend them felues first. know, fom greate and good ones in Courte, were authors, that honest Citizens in London, shoulde watche at euerie gate, to take mifordered persones in apparell. I know, that honest Londoners did so: And I fawe, which I fawe than, and reporte now with fome greife, that fom Courtlie men were offended with these good men of London. And that, which greued me most of all, I sawe the verie same tyme, for all theis good orders, commaunded from the Courte and executed in London, I fawe I fay, cum out Masters, Vshers, of London, euen vnto the prefence of the and Scholers of Prince, a great rable of meane and light fense. persons, in apparell, for matter, against lawe, for making, against order, for facion, namelie hose, so without all order, as he thought himfelfe most braue, that durst do most in breaking order and was most monsterous in miforder. And for all the great commaundementes, that came out of the Courte, yet this bold miforder, was winked at, and borne withall, in the Courte. I thought, it was not well, that fom great ones of the Court, durft declare themselves offended, with good men of London, for doinge their dewtie, and the good ones of the Courte, would not shew themselues offended, with the ill men of London, for breaking good order. I founde thereby a fayinge of Socrates to be most trewe that ill men be more hastie, than good men be forwarde, to profecute their purpofes, euen as Christ himselfe saith, of the Children of light and darknes.

Befide apparell, in all other thinges to, not fo moch, good lawes and strait commaundementes as the example and maner of liuing of great men, doth carie all meane men euerie where, to like, and loue, and do, as they do. For if but two or three noble men in the Court, wold but beginne to shoote, all yong shootyng. Ientlemen, the whole Court, all London, the whole Realme, would straight waie exercise shooting.

What praise shold they wynne to themselues, what commoditie shold they bring to their contrey, that would thus deserue to be pointed at: Beholde, there goeth, the author of good order, the guide of good men. I cold say more, and yet not ouermoch. But perchance, som will say, I have stepte to sarre, out of my schole, into the common welthe, from teaching a

Who, if they do, as I wishe them to do, how great so ever they be now, by blood and other mens meanes, they shall becum a greate deale greater hereafter, by learninge, vertue, and their owne desertes: which is trewe praise, right worthines, and verie Nobilitie in deede. Yet, if som will needes presse me, that I am to bold with great men, and stray to farre from my matter, I will answere Ad Philip. them with S. But, to cum downe, from greate men, and hier matters, to my litle children, and poore schoolehouse againe, I will, God willing, go forwarde orderlie, as I purposed, to instructe Children and yong men, both for learnings and managers.

for learninge and maners.

Hitherto, I have shewed, what harme, overmoch

feare bringeth to children: and what hurte, ill companie, and ouermoch libertie breedeth in yougthe: meening thereby, that from feauen yeare olde, to feauentene, loue is the best allurement to learninge: from seauentene to seauen and twentie, that wise men shold carefullie see the steppes of yougthe surelie staide by good order, in that most slipperie tyme: and speciallie in the Courte, a place most dangerous for yougthe to liue in, without great grace, good regarde, and dili-

Syr Richard Sackuile, that worthy Ientleman of worthy memorie, as I fayd in the begynnynge, in the Queenes priuie Chamber at Windefore, Trauelling after he had talked with me, for the right into Italie. choice of a good witte in a child for learnyng, and of the trewe difference betwixt quicke and hard wittes, of alluring yong children by ientlenes to loue learnyng, and of the speciall care that was to be had, to keepe yong men from licencious liuyng, he was most earnest with me, to have me fay my mynde also, what I thought, concernyng the fansie that many yong Ientlemen of England haue to trauell abroad, and namely to lead a long lyfe in Italie. His request, both for his authoritie, and good will toward me, was a fufficient commaundement vnto me, to fatissie his pleasure, with vtteryng plainlie my opinion in that matter. Syr quoth I, I/ take goyng thither, and liuing there, for a yonge ientleman, that doth not goe vnder the ke[e]pe and garde of fuch a man, as both, by wifedome can, and authoritie dare rewle him, to be meruelous dangerous. whie I faid fo than, I will declare at large now: which I faid than privatelie, and write now openlie, not bicause I do contemne, either the knowledge of strange and diverfe tonges, and namelie the Italian The Italian tonge, which next the Greeke and Latin tong. tonge, I like and loue aboue all other: or elfe bicaufe I do despise, the learning that is gotten, or the experience that is gathered in strange contries: or for any priuate malice that beare to Italie: which Italia.

contrie, and in it, namelie Rome, I haue alwayes speciallie honored: bicause, tyme was, whan Italie and Rome, haue bene, to the greate good of vs that now live, the best breeders and bringers vp, of the worthiest men, not onelie for wife speakinge, but alfo for well doing, in all Ciuill affaires, that euer was in the worlde. But now, that tyme is gone, and though the place remayne, yet the olde and present maners, do differ as farre, as blacke and white, as vertue and vice. Vertue once made that contrie Mistres ouer all the worlde. Vice now maketh that contrie flaue to them, that before, were glad to ferue All man feeth it: They themselues consesse it. namelie foch, as be best and wifest amongest them. For finne, by luft and vanitie, hath and doth breed vp euery where, common contempt of Gods word, private contention in many families, open factions in euery Citie: and fo, makyng them felues bonde, to vanitie and vice at home, they are content to beare the yoke of feruying straungers abroad. Italie now, is not that Italie, that it was wont to be: and therfore now, not fo fitte a place, as fome do counte it, for yong men to fetch either wisedome or honestie from thence. For furelie, they will make other but bad Scholers, that be fo ill Masters to them selues. Yet, if a ientleman will nedes trauell into Italie, he shall do well, to looke on the life, of the wifest traueller, that euer traueled thether. fet out by the wifest writer, that euer spake with tong, Gods doctrine onelie excepted: and that is Vlyffes in Homere. Vlyffes, and his trauell. I wishe Vlysses. our trauelers to looke vpon, not fo much Homere. to feare them, with the great daungers, that he many tymes fuffered, as to instruct them, with his excellent wifedome, which he alwayes and euerywhere vfed. Yea euen those, that be learned and wittie trauelers, when they be disposed to prayle traueling, as a great commendacion, and the best Scripture they have for it, they gladlie recite the third verse of Homere, in his first booke of Odyssea, conteining a great prayse of dome he vsed in trauelling.

Which verse, bicause, in mine opinion, it was not made at the first, more naturallie in Greke by Homere, nor after turned more aptelie into Latin by Horace, than it was a good while ago, in Cambrige, tranflated into English, both plainlie for the sense, and roundlie for the verse, by one of the best Scholers, that euer S. Iohns Colledge bred, M. Watfon, myne old frend, fomtime Bishop of Lincolne, therefore, for their fake, that have luft to fee, how our English tong, in avoidyng barbarous ryming, may as well receiue, right quantitie of fillables, and trewe order of verlifiyng (of which matter more at large hereafter) as either Greke or Latin, if a cunning man haue it in [the] handling, I will fet forth that one verfe in all three tonges, for an Example to good wittes, that shall delite in like learned exercise.

All trauellers do gladly report great prayfe of Ulyffes, For that heknew many mens maners, and faw many Cities.

And yet is not Vlyffes commended, fo much, nor fo oft, in Homere, bicause he was $\pi o \lambda \acute{v} \tau \rho o \pi o s$, that is, skilfull in many mens manners and facions, as bicause he was $\pi o \lambda \acute{v} \mu \eta \tau \iota s$, that is, wise in all purposes, and war[y]ein all places: which wisedome and warenes will not serue neither a trapellas from heauen, except Pallas be alwayes at his heauen. elbow, that is Gods speciall grace from heauen, to kepe him in Gods feare, in all his doynges, in all his ieorneye.

Caribdis land, light vpon the ientle Alcynous, and walke in his faire gardens full of all harmeleffe pleafures: but he shall sometymes, fall, either into the handes of some cruell Cyclops, or into the lappe of some wanton and dalying Dame Calypso: and so suffer the danger of many a deadlie Denne, not so full of perils, to distroy the body, as, sull of vayne pleasures, to poyson the mynde. Some Siren shall sing him a song, sweete in tune, but sownding in the ende, to his vtter destruction. If Scylla drowne him not, Carybdis may fortune swalow hym. Some Circes shall make him, of a plaine

English man, a right Italian. And at length to hell, or to some hellish place, is he likelie to go: from whence is hard returning, although one Vlysses, and that by δδ. λ. Pallas ayde, and good counsell of Tiresias once escaped that horrible Den of deadly darkenes.

Therfore, if wife men will nedes fend their fonnes into Italie, let them do it wifelie, vnder the kepe and garde of him, who, by his wifedome and honestie, by his example and authoritie, may be hable to kepe them fafe and found, in the feare of God, in Christes trewe Religion, in good order and honestie of liuyng: except they will have them run headling [headlong], into ouermany ieoperdies, as Vlyffes had done many tymes, if Pallas had not alwayes gouerned him: if he had not vfed, to stop his eares with waxe: to bind him felfe δδ. μ. to the mast of his shyp: to seede dayly, vpon Moly Herba. that fwete herbe Moly with the blasche roote and white floore, given vnto hym by Mercurie, to avoide all inchantmentes of Circes. Wherby, the Diuine Poete Homer ment couertlie (as wife and Godlym en do iudge) that loue of honestie, and hatred of ill, which David Psal. 33. more plainly doth call the feare of God: the onely remedie agaynst all inchantementes of sinne. I know diverse noble personages, and many worthie Ientlemen of England, whom all the Siren fonges of Italie, could neuer vntwyne from the maste of Gods word: nor no inchantment of vanitie, ouerturne them, from the feare of God, and loue of honestie.

But I know as many, or mo, and fonie, fometyme my deare frendes, for whose fake I hate going into that countrey the more, who, partyng out of England feruent in the loue of Christes doctrine, and well furnished with the feare of God, returned out of Italie worfe transformed, than euer were any in Circes Court. I know diuerfe, that went out of England, men of innocent life, men of excellent learnyng, who returned out of Italie, not onely with worse manners, but also with leffe learnyng: neither so willing to liue orderly, nor yet fo hable to fpeake learnedlie, as they were at home, before they went abroad. And why? Plato, yat wife writer, and worthy traueler him felfe, telleth the cause why. He went into Sicilia, a countrey, no nigher Italy by fite of place, than Italie that is now, is like Sicilia that was then, in all corrupt maners and licenciousnes of life. Plato found in Sicilia, euery Citie full of vanitie, full of factions, euen as Italie is now. And as Homere, like a learned Poete, doth feyne, that Circes, by pleafant inchantmentes, did turne men into beaftes, some into Swine, som in Affes, fome into Foxes, fome into Wolues etc. euen fo, Plato, like a wife Philosopher, doth Plat. ad Dionys. plainelie declare, that pleasure, by licenti- Epist. 3. ous vanitie, that fweet and perilous poyfon of all youth, doth ingender in all those that yeld vp themselues to her, foure notorious properties.

The fruits of vayne pleasure.

The first, forgetfulnes of all good thinges learned before: the fecond, dulnes to receyue either Causes why learnyng or honestie euer after: the third, a mynde embracing lightlie the worse opinion, and baren of discretion to make men returne out of Italie, lesse learned and worsemanered.

trewe difference betwixt good and ill, betwixt troth, and vanitie, the fourth, a proude difdainfulnes of other Homer and Plato ioyned and Plato, haue both one meanying, looke both to one end. For, if a man inglutte himself with vanitie, or walter in filthines like a Swyne, A Swyne. all learnyng, all goodnes, is fone forgotten: Than, quicklie shall he becum a dull Asse, to vnderstand either learnyng or honestie: and yet shall A Foxe. he be as sutle as a Foxe, in breedyng of mischief, in bringyng in misorder, with a busie head, a discoursing tong, and a factious harte, in every private affaire, in all matters of state, with this pretie propertie, alwayes glad to commend the worfe partie, Quid, et vnde. and euer ready to defend the falfer opinion. And why? For, where will is given from goodnes to vanitie, the mynde is fone caryed from right iudgement to any fond opinion, in Religion, in Philosophie, or any other kynde of learning. The fourth fruite of vaine pleasure, by Homer and Platos judgement, is pride in them felues, contempt of others. the very badge of all those that serve in Circes Court. The true meening of both Homer and Plato, is plainlie declared in one fhort fentence of the holy Prophet of God Hieremie, crying out of the vaine and 4. Cap. vicious life of the Ifraelites. (fayth he) be fooles and dulhedes to all goodnes, but fotle, cunning and bolde, in any mischiefe. etc.

The true medecine against the inchantmentes of Circes, the vanitie of licencious pleasure, the inticementes of all sinne, is, in Homere, the herbe Moly, with the blacke roote, and white flooer, sower at the Hesiodus de first, but sweete in the end: which, Hesiodus termeth the study of vertue, hard and irksome in the beginnyng, but in the end, easie and pleasant. And that, which is most to be marueled at, the diuine Poete Homerus diui-Homere sayth plainlie that this medicine against sinne and vanitie is not sound out by man, but giuen and taught by God. And for some some sake, that will have delite to read that sweete and Godlice

Verse, I will recite the very wordes of Homere and also turne them into rude English metre.

χαλεπον δε τ' ορύσσειν ἀνδράσι γε θνητοίσι, θεοί δε πάντα δύναντι.

In English thus.

No mortall man, with sweat of browe, or toile of minde, But onely God, who can do all, that herbe doth finde.

Plato also, that divine Philosopher, hath many Godly medicines agaynst the poyson of vayne pleasure, in many places, but specially in his Epistles to Dionissus the tyrant of Sicilie: yet agaynst those, Plat. ad. Dio. that will nedes becum beaftes, with feruyng of Circes, the Prophet David, crieth most loude, Nolite fieri ficut eques et mulus: and by and by Psal. 32. giueth the right medicine, the trewe herbe Moly, In camo et freno maxillas eorum constringe, that is to fay, let Gods grace be the bitte, let Gods feare be the bridle, to flay them from runnyng headlong into vice, and to turne them into the right way agayne. Dauid in the fecond Pfalme after, giueth the same medi- Psal. 33. cine, but in these plainer wordes, Diverte à malo et fac bonum. But I am affraide, that ouer many of our trauelers into Italie, do not exchewe the way to Circes Court: but go, and ryde, and runne, and flie thether, they make great haft to cum to her: they make great fute to ferue her: yea, I could point out some with my finger, that neuer had gone out of England, but onelie to ferue Circes, in Italie. Vanitie and vice, and any licence to ill liuyng in England was counted ftale and rude vnto them. And fo, beyng Mules and Horses before they went, returned verie Swyne and Asses home agayne: yet euerie where verie Foxes with as futtle and busie heades; and where they may, verie Woolues, with cruell malicious hartes. A maruelous monster, which, for filthines of liuyng, for dulnes to learning him felse, for wilinesse of Circes Court. in dealing with others, for malice in hurting without cause, should carie at once in one bodie, the belie of a Swyne, the head of an Asse, the brayne of a Foxe, the wombe of a wolfe. If you thinke, we judge amisse, and write to fore against you, heare, what the Italian fayth of the English Man, what the master The Italians iudgement of reporteth of the scholer: who vttereth Englishmen playnlie, what is taught by him, and what brought vp in learned by you, faying, Englese Italianato, e vn diabolo incarnato, that is to fay, you remaine men in Thape and facton, but becum deuils in life and condi-This is not, the opinion of one, for fome private. fpite, but the judgement of all, in a common Prouerbe, which rifeth, of that learning, and those maners, which The Italian dif- you gather in Italie: a good Scholehouse of wholesome doctrine, and worthy Masters fameth them selfe, to shame the Englishe of commendable Scholers, where the Mafter had rather diffame hym felfe for hys teachyng, than not shame his Scholer for his learnyng. And now chose you, you Italian Englishe men, whether you will be angrie with vs, for calling you monsters, or with the Italianes, for callyng you deuils, or elfe with your owne felues, that take fo much paines, and go fo farre, to make your felues both. It is pitie, that those, which have authoritie and charge, to allow and diffalow bookes to be printed, be no more circumfpect herein, than they are. Ten Sermons at Paules Croffe do not fo moch good for mouyng men to trewe doctrine, as one of those bookes do harme, with inticing men to ill living. Yea, I say farder, those bookes, tend not so moch to corrupt honest living, as they do, to subvert trewe Religion. Mo Papistes be made, by your mer[r]y bookes of Italie, than by your earnest bookes of Louain. And bicause our great Phisicians, do winke at the matter, and make no counte of this fore, I, though not admitted one of their felowshyp, yet hauyng bene many yeares a prentice to Gods trewe Religion, and trust to continewe a poore iorney man therein all dayes of my life, for the dewtie I owe, and loue I beare, both to trewe doctrine, and honest living, though I haue no authoritie to amend the fore my felfe, yet I

S. Paul faith, that fectes and ill opinions, Ad Gal. 5. be the workes of the flesh, and frutes of sinne, this is spoken, no more trewlie for the doctrine, than sensible for the reason. And why? For, ill doinges, breed ill thinkinges. And of corrupted maners, spryng peruerted iudgementes. And how? there be in man two speciall thinges: Mans will, mans mynde. Where will inclineth to goodnes, the mynde is bent to troth: Where will is caried from goodnes to vanitie, the mynde is sone drawne from troth to salse opinion. And so, the readiest way to entangle the mynde with salse doctrine, is first to intice the will to wanton liuyng. Therfore, when the busie and open Papistes abroad, could not, by their contentious bookes, turne men in England saft enough.

from troth and right iudgement in doctrine, than the futle and fecrete Papistes at home, procured bawdie bookes to be translated out of the Italian tonge, whereby ouer many yong willes and wittes allured to wantonnes, do now boldly contemne all feuere bookes that founde to honestie and godlines. In our forefathers tyme, whan Papistrie, as a standyng poole, couered and ouerflowed all England, fewe bookes were read in our tong, fauvng certaine bookes Cheualrie, as they fayd, for pastime and pleasure, which, as fome fay, were made in Monasteries, by idle Monkes, or wanton Chanons: as one for example, Morte Ar-Morte Arthur. thure: the whole pleafure of which booke standeth in two speciall poyntes, in open mans slaughter, and bold bawdrye: In which booke those be counted the noblest Knightes, that do kill most men without any quarrell, and commit fowlest aduoultersiles by futlest shiftes: as Sir Launcelote, with the wife of king Arthure his master: Syr Tristram with the wife of king Marke his vncle: Syr Lamerocke with the wife of king Lote, that was his own aunte. This is good W. stuffe, for wife men to laughe at, or honest men to take pleafure at. Yet I know, when Gods Bible was banished the Court, and Morte Arthure receiued into the Princes chamber. What toyes, the dayly readyng of fuch a booke, may worke in the will of a yong ientleman, or a yong mayde, that liueth welthelie and idlelie, wife men can judge, and honest men do pitie. And yet ten Morte Arthures do not the tenth part fo much harme, as one of these bookes, made in Italie, and translated in England. They open, not fond and common waves to vice, but fuch fubtle, cunnyng, new, and diuerfe shiftes, to cary yong willes to vanitie, and yong wittes to mischief, to teach old bawdes new schole poyntes, as the fimple head of an Englishman is not hable to inuent, nor neuer was hard of in England before, yea when Papistrie ouerflowed all. Suffer these bookes to be read, and they shall soone displace all bookes of godly learnyng. For they, carying the will to vanitie and marryng good maners, shall easily corrupt the mynde with ill opinions, and false iudgement in doctrine: first, to thinke nothyng of God hym selfe, one special pointe that is to be learned in Italie, and Italian bookes. And that which is most to be lamented, and therfore more nedefull to be looked to, there be moe of these vngratious bookes set out in Printe within these sewe monethes, than haue bene sene in England many score years[s] before. And bicause our English men made Italians can not hurt, but certaine persons, and in certaine places, therfore these Italian bookes are made English, to bryng mischief enough openly and boldly, to all states great and meane, yong and old, euery where.

And thus yow fee, how will intifed to wantonnes, doth easelie allure the mynde to false opinions: and how corrupt maners in liuinge, breede salse iudgement in doctrine: how sinne and stesshlines, bring forth sectes and hereses: And therefore suffer not vaine bookes to breede vanitie in mens willes, if yow would have

Goddes trothe take roote in mens myndes.

That Italian, that first invented the Italian Proverbe against our Englishe men Italianated, ment no more their vanitie in living, than their lewd opinion in Religion. For, in calling them Deviles, he carieth them cleane from God: and yet he carieth them no farder, than they willinglie go themselves, that is, where they may freely say their mindes, to the open contempte of God and all godlines, both in living and doctrine.

And how? I will expresse how, not by a Fable of Homere, nor by the Philosophie of Plato, but by a plaine troth of Goddes word, sensiblie vetered by Dauid thus. Thies men, abhominabiles fasti in studijs suis, thinke verily, and singe gladlie the verse before, Dixit inspiens in Corde suo, non est Deus: that is Psa. 14 to say, they geuing themselves vp to vanitie, shakinge of the motions of Grace, driving from them the seare of God, and running headlong into all sinne, sirst, lustelie contemne God, than scornesulie mocke his worde, and also spitesullie hate and hurte all well willers thereof. Than they have in more reverence, the triumphes of Petrarche: than the Genesis of Moses: They make more account of Tullies offices, than S. Paules epistles: of a tale in Bocace, than a storie of the Bible. Than they counte as Fables, the holie misteries of Christian Religion. They make Christ and his Gospell, onelie serve Civill pollicie: Than neyther Religion cummeth amisse to them: In tyme they be Promoters of both openlie: in place againe mockers of both privile, as I wrote oncein a rude ryme.

Now new, now olde, now both, now neither,

And yet, thies men, in matters of Diuinitie, openlie pretend a great knowledge, and haue prinately to them felues, a verie compendious vnderstanding of all, which neuertheles they will vtter when and where they liste:

spoken, not to hear Gods doctrine trewly preached.

And that is this: All the misteries of Moses, the whole lawe and Cerimonies, the Psalmes and Prophetes, Christ and his Gospell, GOD and the Deuill, Heauen and Hell, Faith, Conscience, Sinne, Death, and all they shortlie wrap vp, they quickly expounde with this one halfe verse of Horace.

Credat Iudæus Appella.

Yet though in Italie they may freely be of no Religion, as they are in Englande in verie deede to, neuerthelesse returning home into England they must countenance the profession of the one or the other, howsoeuer inwardlie, they laugh to scorne both. And though, for their private matters they can follow, fawne, and flatter noble Personages, contrarie to them in all respectes, yet commonlie they allie themselves with the worst Papistes, to whom they be wedded, and do well agree togither opinions. In three proper opinions: In open contempte of Goddes worde: in a secret securitie of sinne: and in a bloodie desire to have all taken away, by sword and burning, that be not of their faction. They that do read, with indifferent judgement, Pygius and Pigius.

Machiauel, two indifferent Patriarches of Machiauelus. thies two Religions, do know sull well what I say trewe.

Ye fee, what manners and doctrine, our Englishe men fetch out of Italie: For finding no other there, they can bring no other hither. And therefore, manie godlie and excellent learned Englishe men, wise and honnot manie yeares ago, did make a better est trauelers. choice, whan open crueltie draue them out of this contrie, to place themselues there, where Christes doctrine, the seare of God, punishment of sinne, Germanie. and discipline of honestie, were had in special regarde.

I was once in Italie my felfe: but I thanke Venice.

God, my abode there, was but ix. dayes: And yet I fawe in that lit[t]le tyme, in one Citie, more libertie to finne, than euer I h[e]ard tell of in our noble Citie of London.

London in ix. yeare. I fawe, it was there, as free to finne, not one lie without all punishment, but also without any mans marking, as it is free in the Citie of London, to chofe, without all blame, whether a man lust to weare Shoo or Pantocle. And good cause why: For being vnlike in troth of Religion, they must nedes be vnlike in honestie of liuing. For bleffed be Chrift, in our Citie Service of God of London, commonlie the commande-in England. menter of Cod harmonlies and commandeand the feruice of God more reverentlie vsed, and that daylie in many private mens houses, than they be in Service of God Italie once a weeke in their common Chirches, where, masking Ceremonies, to delite the eye, and vaine foundes, to pleafe the eare, do quite thrust out of the Chirches, all service of God The Lord Major in spirit and troth. Yea, the Lord Major of London, being but a Civill officer, is comof London. monlie for his tyme, more diligent, in punishing finne, the bent enemie against God and good order, than all The Inquisitors the bloodie Inquisitors in Italie be in seauen yeare. For, their care and charge is, not to punish sinne, not to amend manners, not to purge doctrine, but onelie to watch and ouerfee that Christes trewe Religion set no fure footing, where the Pope hath any Iurisdiction. I learned, when I was at Venice, that there it is counted good pol-An vngodlie pollicie. licie, when there be foure or fiue brethren of one familie, one, onelie to marie: and all the reft, to waulter, with as litle shame, in open lecherie, as Swyne do here in the common myre. Yea, there be as favre houses of Religion, as great prouision, as diligent officers, to kepe vp this miforder, as Bridewell is, and all the Masters there, to kepe downe misorder. therefore, if the Pope himselfe, do not onelie graunt pardons to furder thies wicked purpofes abrode in Italie, but also (although this present Pope, in the beginning, made fom shewe of misliking thereof) assigne both meede and merite to the maintenance of stewes and brothelhouses at home in Rome, than let wise men thinke Italie a fafe place for holfom doctrine, and godlie manners, and a fitte schole for yong ientlemen of England to be brought vp in. Our Italians bring home with them other faultes from Italie, though not so great as this of Religion, yet a great deale greater, than many good men well beare. For commonlie they cum home, common Contempt contemners of mariage and readie per- of mariage. fuaders of all other to the fame: not because they loue virginitie, nor yet because they hate prettie yong virgines, but, being free in Italie, to go whither fo euer lust will cary them, they do not like, that lawe and honestie should be foch a barre to their like libertie at home in England. And yet they be, the greatest makers of loue, the daylie daliers, with fuch pleafant wordes, with fuch fmilyng and fecret countenances, with fuch fignes, tokens, wagers, purposed to be loft, before they were purposed to be made, with bargaines of wearing colours, floures, and herbes, to breede occafion of ofter meeting of him and her, and bolder talking of this and that, etc. And although I have feene fome, innocent of ill, and stayde in all honestie, that haue vfed thefe thinges without all harme, without all fuspicion of harme, yet these knackes were brought first into England by them, that learned them before in Italie in Circes Court: and how Courtlie curtesses so ever they be counted now, yet, if the meaning and maners of some that do vse them, were somewhat amended, it were no great hurt, neither to them felues, nor to others.

An other propertie of this our English Italians is, to be meruelous singular in all their matters: Singular in knowledge, ignorant of nothyng: So singular in wisedome (in their owne opinion) as scarse they counte the best Counsellor the Prince hath, comparable with them: Common discoursers of all matters: busis searchers of most secret affaires: open flatterers of great men: privile missikers of good men: Faire speakers, with smiling countenances, and much curtesse open se to all men. Ready ba[c]kbiters, fore nippers, and spitefull reporters privile of good men. And beyng brought vp in Italie, in some free Citie, as all Cities be there: where a man may freelie discourse against what he will, against whom he lust: against any Prince, agaynst any government, yea against God him felfe, and his whole Religion: where he must be, either Guelphe or Gibiline, either French or Spanish: and alwayes compelled to be of some partie, of some faction, he shall neuer be compelled to be of any Religion: And if he medle not ouer much with Christes true Religion, he shall have free libertie to embrace all Religions, and becum, if he lust at once, without any let or punishment, Iewish, Turkish, Papish, and Deuillish.

A yong Ientleman, thus bred vp in this goodly schole, to learne the next and readie way to sinne, to have a busie head, a factious hart, a talkative tonge, fed with discoursing of factions: led to contemne God and his Religion, shall cum home into England, but verie ill taught, either to be an honest man him self, a quiet subject to his Prince, or willyng to serve God, vnder the obedience of trewe doctrine, or with in the order of honest living.

I know, none will be offended with this my generall writing, but onelie fuch, as finde them felues giltie priuatelie therin: who shall have a good leave to be offended with me, vntill they begin to amende them selves. I touch not them that be good: and I say to litle of them that be nought. And so, though not enough for their deserving, yet sufficientlie for this time, and more els when, if occasion so require.

And thus farre haue I wandred from my first purpose of teaching a child, yet not altogether out of the way, bicause this whole taulke hath tended to the onelie advancement of trothe in Religion, an honestie of liuing: and hath bene wholie within the compasse of learning and good maners, the special pointes belonging in the right bringing vp of youth.

But to my matter, as I began, plainlie and fimplie with my yong Scholer, fo will I not leave him, God willing, vntill I have brought him a perfite Scholer out of the Schole, and placed him in the Vniuersitie, to becum a fitte student, for Logicke and Rhetoricke: and so after to Phisicke, Law, or Divinitie, as aptnes of nature, aduise of frendes, and Gods disposition shall lead him.

The fecond booke.

Fter that your scholer, as I favd before, shall cum in deede, first, to a readie perfitnes in translating. than, to a ripe and skilfull choice in markyng out hys fixe pointes. as

1. Proprium.

2. Tranflatum.
3. Synonynum.
4. Contrarium.
5. Diuerfum.
6. Phrafes.

Than take this order with him: Read dayly vnto Lim, some booke of Tullie, as the third Cicero. booke of Epistles chosen out by Sturmius, de Amicitia, de Senectute, or that excellent Epistle conteining almost the whole first booke ad Q. fra: some Comedie of Terence or Plautus: but in Plautus, skilfull Terentius. choice must be vsed by the master, to traine Plantus. his Scholler to a judgement, in cutting out perfitelie ouer old and vnproper wordes: Caf. Iul. Casar. Commentaries are to be read with all curiofitie, in specially without all exception to be made either by frende or foe, is feene, the vnfpotted proprietie of the Latin tong, euen whan it was, as the Grecians fay, in ακμη, that is, at the hiest pitch of all perfitenesse: or some Orations of T. Liuius, fuch as be both longest and T. Liuius. plainest.

These bookes, I would have him read now, a good deale at euery lecture: for he shall not now vse da [i]lie translation, but onely construe againe, and parse, where ye fuspect is any nede: yet, let him not omitte in these bookes, his former exercise, in marking diligently, and writyng orderlie out his fix pointes. And for translating, vie you your felfe, euery fecond or thyrd day, to chose out, some Epistle ad Atticum, some notable common place out of his Orations, or fome other part of Tullie, by your difcretion, which your scholer may not know where to finde: and translate it you your selfe, into plaine naturall English, and than give it him to translate into Latin againe: allowyng him good space and tyme to do it, both with diligent heede, and good aduisement. Here his witte shalbe new fet on worke: his judgement, for right choice, trewlie tried: his memorie, for fure reteyning, better exercifed, than by learning, any thing without the booke: and here. how much he hath proffited, shall plainly appeare. Whan he bringeth it translated vnto you, bring you forth the place of Tullie: lay them together: compare the one with the other: commend his good choice, and right placing of wordes: Shew his faultes iently, but blame them not ouer sharply: for, of such missings, ientlie admonished of, proceedeth glad and good heed taking: of good heed taking, springeth chiefly knowledge, which after, groweth to perfitnesse, if this order. be diligentlie vsed by the scholer and iently handled by the master: for here, shall all the hard pointes of Grammer, both eafely and furelie be learned vp: which, fcholers in common fcholes, by making of Latines, be groping at, with care and feare, and yet in many yeares, they scarce can reach vnto them. I remember, whan I was yong, in the North, they went to the Grammer schole, litle children: they came from thence great lubbers: alwayes learning, and litle profiting: learning without booke, euery thing, vnderstandyng with in the booke, little or nothing. Their whole knowledge, by learning without the booke, was tied onely to their tong and lips, and neuer afcended vp to the braine and head, and therfore was fone spitte out of the mouth againe: They were, as men, alwayes goyng, but euer out of the way; and why? For their whole labor, or rather great toyle without order, was even vaine idlenesse without proffit. In deed, they tooke great paynes about learning: but employed fmall labour in learning: Whan by this way prescribed in this booke, being streight, plaine, and easie, the fcholer is alwayes laboring with pleasure, and euer going right on forward with proffit: Alwayes laboring I fay, for, or he have construed, parced, twife translated ouer by good aduifement, marked out his fix pointes by skilfull judgement, he shall have necessarie occasion, to read ouer euery lecture, a dosen tymes, at the leaft. Which, bicaufe he shall do alwayes in order, he shall do it alwayes with pleasure: And pleasure allureth loue: loue hath lust to labor: labour alwayes obteineth his purpose, as most trewly, both Aristotle in his Rhetoricke and Oedipus in Sophocles do teach, faying, πῶν γὰρ ἐκπονόυμενον ἄλισκε. et cet. Rhet. 2 and this oft reading, is the verie right In Oedip. Tyr. following, of that good Counfell, which Epist. lib. 7. Plinie doth gene to his frende Fuscus, faying, Multum, non multa. But to my purpose againe:

Whan, by this diligent and spedie reading ouer, those forenamed good bokes of Tullie, Terence, Casar and Livie, and by this second kinde of translating out of your English, tyme shall breed skill, and vse shall bring perfection, than we may trie, if you will, your bring perfection, than ye may trie, if you will, your scholer, with the third kinde of translation: although the two first wayes, by myne opinion, be, not onelie sufficent of them selues, but also surer, both for the Masters teaching, and scholers learning, than this third way is: Which is thus. Write you in English, some letter, as it were from him to his father, or to some other frende, naturallie, according to the disposition of the child, or some tale, or sable, or plaine narration, according as Aphthonius beginneth his exercises of learning, and let him translate it into Latin againe, learning, and let him translate it into Latin againe, abiding in foch place, where no other scholer may prompe him. But yet, vse you your selfe soch discretion for choice therein, as the matter may be within the compas, both for wordes and fentences, of his former learning and reading. And now take heede, lest your scholer do not better in some point, than you your selfe, except ye have bene diligentlie exercised in these kindes of translating before:

I had once a profe hereof, tried by good experience, by a deare frende of myne, whan I came first from Cambrige, to ferue the Queenes Maiestie, than Ladie Elizabeth, lying at worthie Sir Ant. Denys in Cheston. Iohn Whitneye, a yong ientleman, was my bedfeloe, who willyng by good nature and prouoked by mine aduife, began to learne the Latin tong, after the order declared in this booke. We began after Christmas: I read vnto him Tullie de Amicitia, which he did euerie day twife translate, out of Latin into English, and out of English into Latin agayne. About S. Laurence tyde after, to proue how he proffited, I did chose out Torquatus taulke de Amicitia, in the lat[t]er end of the first booke de finib. because that place was, the same in matter, like in wordes and phrases, nigh to the forme and facion of fentences, as he had learned before in de Amicitia. I did translate it my selse into plaine English, and gaue it him to turne into Latin: Which he did, fo choislie, fo orderlie, fo without any great misse in the hardest pointes of Grammer, that some, in feuen yeare in Grammer scholes, yea, and some in the Vniuersities to, can not do halfe so well. This worthie yong Ientleman, to my greatest grief, to the great lamentation of that whole house, and speciallie to that most noble Ladie, now Queene Elizabeth her selse. departed within few dayes, out of this world.

And if in any cause a man may without offence of God speake somewhat vngodlie, surely, it was some grief vnto me, to see him hie so hastlie to God, as he did. A Court, sull of soch yong Ientlemen, were rather a Paradise than a Court vpon earth. And though I had neuer Poeticall head, to make any verse, in any tong, yet either loue, or sor[r]ow, or both, did wring out of me than, certaine carefull thoughtes of my good will towardes him, which in my moolurning for him, fell forth, more by chance, than either by skill or vie, into this kinde of miforderlie meter.

Myne owne Iohn Whitney, now farewell, now death doth parte vs twaine,

No death, but partyng for a while, whom life shall ioyne agayne.

Therfore my hart ceafe fighes and fobbes, ceafe for [r] owes feede to fow, Wherof no gaine, but greater grief, and hurtfull care may grow. lent.

Yet, whan I thinke vpon foch giftes of grace as God him My loffe, his gaine, I must a while, with ioyfull teares lament.

Yong yeares to yelde foch frute in Court, where feede of vice is fowne. knowne.

Is fometime read, in some place seene, amongst vs seldom His life he ledde, Christes lore to learne, with [w ill to worke the fame.

He read to know, and knew to live, and lived to praife his name.

So fast to frende, so soe to few, so good to every wight, I may well wishe, but scarcelie hope, agayne to have in fight. The greater joye his life to me, his death the greater payne: His life in Christ so furelie set, doth glad my hearte agayne: care,

His life fo good, his death better, do mingle mirth with My spirit with ioye, my flesh with grief, so deare a frend to spare.

Thus God the good, while they be good, doth take, and leaues vs ill,

That we should mend our finfull life, in life to tary still. Thus, we well left, be better reft, in heaven to take his place, That by likelife, and death, at last, we may obteine like grace. Myne owne Iohn Whiteney agayne fairewell, a while thus parte in waine,

Whom payne doth part in earth, in heaven great ioy! shall ioyne agayne.

In this place, or I procede farder, I will now declare. by whose authoritie I am led, and by what reason I am moued, to thinke, that this way of d[o]uble translation out of one tong into an other, in either onelie, or at least chiefly, to be exercised, speciallie of youth, for the ready and fure obtaining of any tong.

There be fix wayes appointed by the best learned men, for the learning of tonges, and encreace of eloquence, as

Translatio linguarum.

1. Tranjiano n.
2. Paraphrafis.
3. Metaphrafis.
4. Epitome.
5. Imitatio.
6. Declamatio.

All theis be vsed, and commended, but in order, and for respectes: as person, habilitie, place, and tyme shall require. The five last, be fitter, for the Master, than the scholer: for men, than for children: for the vniuerfities, rather than for Grammer scholes: yet neuerthelesse, which is, fittest in mine opinion, for our schole, and which is, either wholie to be refused, or partlie to be vsed for our purpose, I will, by good authoritie, and some reason, I trust perticularlie of euerie one, and largelie enough of them all, declare orderlie vnto you.

¶ Translatio Linguarum.

Translation, is easie in the beginning for the scholer, and bringeth all fo moch learning and great judgement to the Master. It is most common, and most commendable of all other exercises for youth: most common, for all your constructions in Grammer scholes, be nothing els but translations: but because they be not double translations, as I do require, they bring forth but simple and single commoditie, and bicause also they lacke the daily vse of writing, which is the onely thing that breedeth deepe roote, both in ye witte, for good vnderstanding, and in ye memorie, for sure keeping of all that is learned. Most commendable also, and that by ye iudgement of all authors, which intreate of theis exercises. Tullie in the person of r. de. Or.

L. Craffus, whom he maketh his example of eloquence and trewe judgement in learning, doth, not onely praife fpecially, and chofe this way of translation for a yong man, but doth also discommend and resuse his owne former wont, in exercifing Paraphrasin et Metaphrasin. Paraphrasis is, to take some eloquent Oration, or some notable common place in Latin, and expresse it with other wordes: Metaphrasis is, to take some notable place out of a good Poete, and turn the fame fens into meter or into other wordes in Profe. Craffus, or rather Tullie, doth mislike both these wayes, bicause the Author, either Orator or Poete, had chosen out before, the fittest wordes and aptest composition for that matter, and fo he, in feeking other, was driven to vie the worfe.

Quintilian also preferreth translation before all other exercifes: yet having a luft, to diffent, from Quint x.

Tullie (as he doth in very many places, if a man read his Rhetoricke ouer aduifedlie, and that rather of an enuious minde, than of any iust cause) doth greatlie commend Paraphrasis, crossing spitefullie Tullies iudgement in refusing the same: and so do Ramus and Talæus even at this day in France to. But such singularitie, in diffenting from the best mens iudgementes, in liking onelie their owne opinions, is moch misliked of all them, that ioyne with learning, discretion, and wisedome. For he, that can neither like Aristotle in Logicke and Philosophie, nor Tullie in Rhetoricke and Eloquence, will, from these steppes, likelie enough prefume, by like pride, to mount hier, to the misliking of greater matters: that is either in Religion, to have a diffentious head, or in the common wealth, to haue a factious hart: as I knew one a student in Cambrige, who, for a fingularitie, began first to diffent, in the scholes, from Aristotle, and sone after became a peruerse Arian, against Christ and all true Religion: and studied diligentlie Origene, Basileus, and S. Hierome, onelie to gleane out of their workes, the pernicious heresies of Celsus, Eunomius, and Heluidius, whereby the Church of Christ, was so poysoned withall.

But to leaue these hye pointes of diuinitie, surelie, in this quiet and harmeles controuersie, for the liking, or misliking of Paraphrasis for a yong scholer, euen as far, as Tullie goeth beyond Quintilian, Ramus and Talæus, in persite Eloquence, euen so moch, by myne opinion, cum they behinde Tullie, for trew iudgement in teaching the same.

* Plinius Secundus, a wife Senator, of cundus. Plinius great experience, excellentlie learned him præceptori suo, felfe, a liberall Patrone of learned men, and in matrimonium filiæ, 50000 [60000] numum age, I except not Suetonius, his two fcholemasters Quintilian and Tacitus, nor yet his most exepist. lib. 7, cellent learned Vncle, the Elder Plinius, doth expresse in an Epistle to his frende Fuscus, many good wayes for order in studie: but he beginneth with translation, and preferreth it to all the rest: and because his wordes be notable, I will recite them.

Vtile in primis, vt multi præcipiunt, ex Græco in Latinum, et ex Latino vertere in Græcum: Quo genere exercitationis, proprietas splendorque verborum, apta structura fententiarum, figurarum copia et explicandi vis colligitur. Præterea, imitatione optimorum, facultas fimilia inueniendi paratur: et quæ legentem, fefelliffent, transferentem sugere non possunt. Intelligentia ex hoc, et iudicium acquiritur.

Ye perceiue, how Plinie teacheth, that by his exercife of double translating, is learned, easely, fensiblie, by litle and litle, not onelie all the hard congruities of Grammer, the choice of aptest wordes, the right framing of wordes and fentences, cumlines of figures and formes, fitte for euerie matter, and proper for euerie tong, but that which is greater also, in marking dayly, and following diligentlie thus, the steppes of the best Aut[h]ors, like invention of Argumentes, like order in disposition, like vtterance in Elocution, is easelie gathered vp: whereby your fcholer shall be brought not onelie to like eloquence, but also, to all trewe vnderstanding and right iudgement, both for writing and speaking. And where Dionys. Halicarnassaus hath written two excellent bookes, the one, de delectu optimorum verborum, the which, I feare, is loft, the other, of the right framing of wordes and fentences, which doth remaine yet in Greeke, to the great proffet of all them, that trewlie studie for eloquence, yet this waie of double translating, shall bring the whole proffet of both these bookes to a diligent scholer, and that easelie and pleafantlie, both for fitte choice of wordes, and apt composition of fentences. And by their authorities and reafons am I moued to thinke, this waie of double translating, either onelie or chieflie, to be fittest, for the fpedy and perfit atteyning of any tong. And for fpedy atteyning, I durst venture a good wager, if a scholer, in whom is aptnes, loue, diligence, and constancie, would but translate, after this forte, one litle booke in Tullie, as de feneclute, with two Epistles, the first ad Q. fra: the other ad Lentulum, the last faue one, in the first booke, that scholer, I fay, should cum to a better knowledge in the Latin tong, than the most part do, that fpend four or fiue yeares, in toffing all the rules of Grammer in common fcholes. In deede this one booke with these two Epistles, is not sufficient to affourde all Latin wordes (which is not necessarie for a yong fcholer to know) but it is able to furnishe him fully, for all pointes of Grammer, with the right placing, ordering, and vfe of wordes in all kinde of matter. And why not? for it is read, that Dion, Pruffaus, that wife Philofopher, and excellent orator of all his tyme, did cum to the great learning and vtterance that was in him, by reading and following onelie two bookes, Phædon Platonis, and Demosthenes most notable oration περί παραπρεσβείας. And a better, and nerer example herein, may be, our most noble Queene Elizabeth, who neuer toke yet, Greeke nor Latin Grammer in her hand, after the first declining of a nowne and a verbe, but onely by this double translating of Demosthenes and Ifocrates dailie without missing euerie forenone, for the fpace of a yeare or two, hath atteyned to foch a perfite vnderstanding in both the tonges, and to foch a readie vtterance of the latin, and that wyth foch a judgement, as they be fewe in nomber in both the vniuerlities, or els where in England, that be, in both tonges, comparable with her Maiestie. And to conclude in a fhort rowme, the commodities of double translation, furelie the mynde by dailie marking, first, the caufe and matter: than, the wordes and phrases: next, the order and composition: after, the reason and argumentes: than the formes and figures of both the tonges: lastelie, the measure and compas of euerie fentence, must nedes, by litle and litle drawe vnto it the like shape of eloquence, as the author doth vse, which is refald.

And thus much for double translation.

Paraphrafis.

Paraphrafis, the fecond point, is not onelie to expresse at large with moe wordes, but to striue and contend (as Quintilian faith) to translate the best latin authors, into other latin wordes, as many or thereaboutes.

This waie of exercife was vsed first by C. Crabo, and taken vp for a while, by L. Crassus, but fone after, vpon dewe profe thereof, rejected instlie by Crassus and Cicero: yet allowed and made sterling agayne by M. Quintilian: neuerthelesse, shortlie after, by better assay, disalowed of his owne scholer Plinius Secundus, who termeth it rightlie thus Audax contentio. It is a bold comparison in deede, to thinke to say better, than that is best. Soch turning of the best into worse, is much like the turning of good wine, out of a faire

fweete flagon of filuer, into a foule mustie bottell of ledder: or, to turne pure gold and filuer, into foule braffe and copper.

Soch kinde of Paraphrasis, in turning, chopping, and changing, the best to worse, either in the mynte or scholes, (though M. Brokke and Quintilian both fay the contrary) is moch misliked of the best and wisest men. I can better allow an other kinde of Paraphrasis. to turne rude and barbarus, into proper and eloquent: which neuertheleffe is an exercise, not fitte for a scholer, but for a perfite master, who in plentie hath good choife, in copie hath right judgement, and grounded skill, as did appeare to be in Sebastian Castalio, in translating Kemppes booke de Imitando Christo.

But to folow Quintilianus aduise to Paraphrasis, were euen to take paine, to feeke the worfe and fowler way, whan the plaine and fairer is occupied before your eyes.

The olde and best authors that euer wrote, were content if occasion required to speake twife of one matter, not to change the wordes, but βητώs, that is, worde for worde to expresse it againe. For they thought, that a matter, well expressed with fitte wordes and apt composition, was not to be altered, but liking it well their selues, they thought it would also be well allowed of others.

A scholemaster (soch one as I require) knoweth that I fay trewe.

He readeth in Homer, almost in euerie Homerus. booke, and speciallie in Secundo et nono Iliados, not onelie fom verfes, but whole leaues, not to onelie for verses, but whole leaves, not to be altered with new, but to be vttered with $[T]\lambda$ the old felfe fame wordes.

He knoweth, that Xenophon, writing Xenophon. twife of Agefilaus, once in his life, againe in the historie of the Greekes, in one matter, kepeth alwayes the felfe same wordes. He doth the like, speaking of Socrates, both in the beginning of his Apologie and in the last ende of ἀπομνημονευμάτων.

Demosthenes also in 4. Philippica, doth borow his owne wordes vttered before in his oration de Chersoneso. He doth the like, and that more at large, in his orations, against Andration and Timocrates. In latin alfo, Cicero in fom places, and Virgilius. Virgil in mo, do repeate one matter, with the felfe fame wordes. Thies excellent authors, did thus, not for lacke of wordes, but by judgement and skill: whatsoeuer, other, more curious, and lesse skilfull, do thinke, write, and do.

Paraphrasis neuerthelesse hath good place in learning, but not, but myne opinion, for any scholer, but is onelie to be left to a perfite Master, eyther to expound openlie a good author withall, or to compare priuatelie, for his owne exercife, how fome notable place of an excellent author, may be vttered with other fitte wordes: But if ye alter also, the composition, forme, and order than that is not Paraphrasis, but Imitatio, as I will fullie declare in fitter place.

The scholer shall winne nothing by Paraphrasis, but onelie, if we may beleue Tullie, to choose worse wordes. to place them out of order, to feare ouermoch the iudgement of the master, to mislike ouermoch the hardnes of learning, and by vse, to gather vp faultes, which hardlie will be left of againe.

The master in teaching it, shall rather encrease hys owne labo[u]r, than his scholers proffet: for when the scholer shall bring vnto his master a peece of Tullie or Cafar turned into other latin, then must the master cum to Quintilians goodlie lesson de Emendatione, which, (as he faith) is the most profitable part of teaching, but not in myne opinion, and namelie for youthe in Grammer fcholes. For the master nowe taketh double paynes: first, to marke what is amisse: againe, to inuent what may be fayd better. And here perchance, a verie good master may easelie both deceiue himselse, and lead his scholllers into error.

It requireth greater learning, and deeper iudge-

ment, than is to be hoped for at any scholemasters hand: that is, to be able alwaies learnedlie and per-fitelie.

Mutare quod ineptum est:
Transmutare quod peruersum est:
Replere quod deest;
Detrahere quod obest:
Expungere quod inane est.

And that, which requireth more skill, and deaper

confideracion.

Premere tumentia:
Extollere humilia:
Astringere luxuriantia:
Componere diffoluta.

The master may here onelie stumble, and perchance fault in teaching, to the marring and mayning of the Scholer in learning, whan it is a matter, of moch readyng, of great learning, and tried iudgement, to make trewe difference betwixt.

Sublime, et Tumidum:
Grande, et immodicum:
Decorum, et ineptum:
Perfectum, et nimium.

Some men of our time, counted perfite Maisters of eloquence, in their owne opinion the best, in other mens iudgements very good, as Omphalius euerie where, Sadoletus in many places, yea also my frende Oforius, namelie in his Epistle to the Queene and in his whole booke de Iusticia, haue so ouer reached them selues, in making trew difference in the poyntes afore rehearsed, as though they had bene brought vp in some schole in Asia, to learne to decline rather then in Athens with Plato, Aristotle, and Demosthenes, (from whence Tullie setched his eloquence) to vnderstand, what in euerie matter, to be spoken or written on, is, in verie deede, Nimium, Satis, Parum, that is for to say, to all considerations, Decorum, which, as it is the hardest point, in all learning, so is it the fairest and onelie marke, that scholers, in all their studie, must alwayes shote at, if they purpose an other day to be,

either founde in Religion, or wife and difcrete in any vocation of the common wealth.

Agayne, in the lowest degree, it is no low point of learning and iudgement for a Scholemaster, to make trewe difference betwixt.

(Humile et deprefsum: Lene et remissum: Siccum et aridum: Exile et macrum: Inaffectatum et neglectum.

In these poyntes, some, louing Melancthon well, as he was well worthie, but yet not confidering well nor wifelie, how he of nature, and all his life and studie by judgement was wholly spent in genere Disciplinabili, that is, in teaching, reading, and expounding plainlie and aptlie schole matters, and therefore imployed thereunto a fitte, fenfible, and caulme kinde of fpeaking and writing, fome I fay, with very well liuyng [likyng?], but not with verie well weying MelanEthones doinges, do frame them felues a ftyle, cold, leane, and weake, though the matter be neuer fo warme and earnest, not moch vnlike vnto one, that had a pleafure, in a roughe, raynie, winter day, to clothe him felfe with nothing els, but a demie bukram caffok, plaine without pl[a]ites, and fingle without lyning: which will neither beare of winde nor wether, nor yet kepe out the funne, in any hote day.

Paraphrasis in vse of teaching hath hurt Me-

Some suppose, and that by good reason, that Melancthon him felfe came to this low kinde of writing, by vfing ouer moch Paralanctions stile phrasis in reading: For studying therbie to make euerie thing streight and easie, in fmothing and playning all things to much, neuer leaueth. whiles the fence it felfe be left, both lowfe and lafie. And some of those Paraphrasis of Melanethon be set out in Printe, as, Pro Archia Poeta, et Marco Marcello. But a scholer, by myne opinion, is better occupied in playing or fleping, than in fpendyng time, not onelie vainlie but also harmefullie, in soch a kinde of exercise.

If a Master woulde have a perfite example to folow.

the ready way to the Latin tong. 101

how, in Genere fublimi, to avoide Nimium, or in Mediocri, to atteyne Satis, or in Humili, to exchew Parum, lethim read diligently for the first, Secundam Cicero.

Philippicam, for the meane, De Natura Deorum, and for the lowest, Partitiones. Or, if in an other tong, ye looke for like example, in like perfection, for all those three degrees, read Pro Ctesiphonte, Ad Demosthenes. Leptinem, et Contra Olympiodorum, and, what witte, Arte, and diligence is hable to affourde, ye shall plainely see.

For our tyme, the odde man to performe all three perfitlie, whatfoeuer he doth, and to know the way to do them skilfullie, whan so euer he list, is, in my poore opinion, Iohannes Sturmius.

He also councelleth all scholers to beware of Para-phrasis, except it be, from worse to better, from rude and barbarous, to proper and pure latin, and yet no man to exercise that neyther, except soch one, as is alreadie surnished with plentie of learning, and grounded with stedsaft iudgement before.

All theis faultes, that thus manie wife men do finde with the exercise of Paraphrasis, in turning the best latin, into other, as good as they can, that is, ye may be sure, into a great deale worse, than it was, both in right choice for proprietie, and trewe placing, for good order is committed also commonlie in all common scholes, by the scholemasters, in tossing and trobling yong wittes (as I sayd in the beginning) with that boocherlie feare in making of Latins.

Therefore, in place of Latines for yong scholers, and Paraphrasis for the masters, I wold have double translation specially vsed. For, in double translating a perfite peece of Tullie or Casfar, neyther the scholer in learning, nor ye Master in teaching can erre. A true tochstone, a sure metwand lieth before both their eyes. For, all right congruitie: proprietie of wordes: order in sentences: the right imitation, to inuent good matter, to dispose it in good order, to confirme it with good reason, to expresse any purpose fitlie and orderlie, is learned thus, both easelie and perfitlie: Yea, to misse some in this kinde of translation, bringeth more prosset, than to hit right, either in Paraphrasi or making of Latins. For though ye say well, in a latin making, or in a Paraphrasis, yet you being but in do[u]bte, and vncertayne whether ye saie well or no, ye gather and lay vp in memorie, no sure srute of learning thereby: But if ye sault in translation, ye ar[e] easelie taught, how perfitlie to amende it, and so well warned, how after to exchew, all soch saultes againe.

Paraphrasis therefore, by myne opinion, is not meete for Grammer scholes: nor yet verie fitte for yong men in the vniuersitie, vntill studie and tyme, haue bred in them, perfite learning, and stedfast judgement.

There is a kinde of Paraphrasis, which may be vsed, without all hurt, to moch proffet: but it ferueth onely the Greke and not the latin, nor no other tong, as to alter linguam Ionicam aut Doricam into meram Atticam: A notable example there is left vnto vs by a notable learned man Diony: Halicarn: who, in his booke, περί συντάξεος, doth translate the goodlie storie of Candaulus and Gyges in I Herodoti, out of Ionica lingua, into Atticam. Read the place, and ye shall take, both pleasure and proffet, in conserence of it. A man, that is exercised in reading, Thucydides, Xenophon, Plato, and Demosthenes, in vsing to turne, like places of Herodotus, after like forte, shold shortlie cum to fuch a knowledge, in vnderstanding, speaking, and writing the Greeke tong, as fewe or none hath yet atterned in England. The like exercise out of Dorica lingua may be also vsed, if a man take that litle booke of Plato, Timœus Locrus, de Animo et natura, which is written Dorice, and turne it into foch Greeke, as Plato vfeth in otherworkes. The booke, is but two leaues: and the laborwold be, but two weekes: but furelie the proffet. for easie vnderstanding, and trewe writing the Greeke tonge, wold conteruaile with the toile, that fom men taketh, in otherwise coldliereading that tonge, two yeares. And yet, for the latin tonge, and for the exercise of

the ready way to the Latin tong. 103

Paraphrasis, in those places of latin, that can not be bettered, if some yong man, excellent of witte, couragious in will, lustie of nature, and desirous to contend euen with the best latin, to better it, if he can, surelie I commend his forwardnesse, and for his better instruction therein, I will set before him, as notable an example of Paraphrasis, as is in Record of learning. Cicero him selfe, doth contend, in two sondrie places, to expresse one matter, with diuerse wordes: and that is Paraphrasis, saith Quintillian. The matter I suppose, is taken out of Panatius: and therefore being translated out of Greeke at diuers times, is vttered for his purpose, with diuers wordes and formes: which kind of exercise, for persite learned men, is verie profitable.

2. De Finib.

a. Homo enim Rationem habet à natura menti datam quæ, et causas rerum et consecutiones videt, et similitudines, transfert, et dissuncta coniungit, et cum præsentibus futura copulat, omnemque complectitur vitæ consequentis statum. b. Eademque ratio facit hominem hominum appetendum, cumquehis, natura, et sermone in vsu congruentem: vt profectus à caritate domesticorum ac suorum, currat longius, et se implicet, primo Ciuium, deinde omnium mortalium societati: vtque non sibi soli se natum meminerit, sed patriæ, sed suis, vt exigua pars ipsi relinquatur. c. Et quoniam eadem natura cupiditatem ingenuit homini veri inueniendi, quod facillimè apparet, cum vacui curis, etiam quid in cælo siat, scire avemus, etc.

1. Officiorum.

A Homo autem, qui rationis est particeps, per quam confequentia cernit, et caufas rerum videt, earumque progrefsus, et quasi antecessiones non ignorat, similitudines, comparat, rebusque præfentibus adiungit, atque annectit futuras, facile totius vitæ cursum videt, ad eamque degendam præparat res necessarias. b. Eademque natura vi rationis hominem conciliat homini, et al Orationis et ad vitæ societatem: ingeneratque imprimis præcipuum quendam amorem in eos, qui procreati funt, impellitque vi hominum cœtus et celebrari inter fe, et fibi obediri [a feobiri] velit, ob eafque caufas studeat par ure ea, quæ fuppeditent ad cultum et ad victum, nec fibi foli, fed coniugi, liberis, cæterifque quos charos habeat, tuerique debeat. c. Quæ cura exfufcitat etiam animos, et maiores ad rem gerendam facit: imprimifque hominis est propria veri inquifitio atque inuestigatio: ita cum fumus neceffarijs negocijs curifque vacui, tum auemus aliquid videre, audire, addiferere, cognitionemque rerum mirabilium, etc.

The conference of these two places, conteining so excellent a peece of learning, as this is, expressed by so worthy a witte, as Tullies was, must needes bring great pleasure and prossit to him, that maketh trew counte, of learning and honestie. But if we had the Greke Author, the first Patterne of all, and therby to see, how Tullies witte did worke at diverse tymes, how, out of one excellent Image, might be framed two other, one in face and sauor, but somwhat differing in some, sigure, and color, surelie, such a peece of workemanship compared with the Paterne it selfe, would better please the ease of honest, wise, and learned myndes, than two of the sairest Venusses, that ever Apelles made.

And thus moch, for all kinde of Paraphrafis, fitte or vnfit, for Scholers or other, as I am led to thinke, not onelie, by mine owne experience, but chiefly by the authoritie and iudgement of those, whom I my selfe would gladliest follow, and do counsell all myne to do the same: not contendyng with any other, that will otherwise either thinke or do.

Metaphrasis.

This kinde of exercife is all one with Paraphrasis, saue it is out of verse, either into prose, or into some other kinde of meter: or els, out of prose into verse, which was Socrates exercise and pastime Phaedone. (as Plato reporteth) when he was in prison, to translate Æfopes Fabules into verse. Ouintilian doth greatlie praise also this exercise: but bicause Tullie doth disalow it in young men, by myne opinion, it were not well to vie it [in] Grammer Scholes, euen for the felfe same causes, that be recited against Paraphrasis. And therfore, for the vse or misuse of it, the same is to be thought, that is spoken of Paraphrasis before. This was Sulpitius exercise: and he gathering vp thereby, a Poeticall kinde of talke, is iustlie named of Cicero, grandis et Tragicus Orator: which I think is spoken, not for his praise, but for other mens warning, to exchew the like faulte. Yet neuertheles, if our Scholemaster for his owne instruction, is desirous, to see a perfite example hereof, I will recite one, which I thinke, no man is fo bold, will fay, that he can amend it: and that is Chrifes the Priestes Oration to the Grekes, in the beginning of Homers Ilias, Hom. 1. 11. turned excellentlie into profe by Socrates Pla. 3. Rep. him felte, and that aduifedlie and purpofelie for other to folow: and therfore he calleth this exercise, in the fame place, μίμησις, that is, Imitatio, which is most trew: but, in this booke, for teaching fake, I will name it Metaphrafis, reteining the word, that all teachers, in this case, do vse.

To compare Homer and Plato together, two wonders of nature and arte for witte and eloquence, is most pleasant and profitable, for a man of ripe iudgement. Platos turning of Homer in this place, doth not ride a loft in Poeticall termes, but goeth low and foft on foote, as prose and Pedestris oratio should do. If Sulpitius had had Platos confideration, in right vfing this exercife, he had not deserved the name of Tragicus Orator, who should rather have studied to expresse vim Demosthenes, than furorem Poætæ, how good so euer he was. whom he did follow.

And therfore would I have our Scholemaster wey well together Homer and Plato, and marke diligentlie these source pointes, what is kept; what is added; what is left out: what is changed, either, in choise of wordes, or forme of fentences; which foure pointes, be the right tooles, to handle like a workeman, this kinde of worke: as our Scholer shall better vnderstand, when he hath befelne a good while in the Vniuersitie: to which tyme and place, I chiefly remitte this kind of exercife.

And bicause I euer thought examples to be the best kinde of teaching, I will recite a golden fentence out of that Poete, which is next vnto Homer, not onelie in tyme, but also in worthines: which hath beene a paterne for many worthie wittes to follow, by this kind of Metaphrasis, but I will content my selfe, with source workemen, two in Greke, and two in Latin, foch, as in both the tonges, wifer and worthier, can not be looked for. Surelie, no stone set in gold by most cunning workemen, is in deed, if right counte be made, more worthie the looking on, than this golden fentence, diverslie wrought upon, by foch foure excellent Masters.

Cicero doth not plainlie expresse the last sentence, but doth inuent it sitlie for his purpose, to taunt the solie and simplicitie in his aduersarie Actius, not weying ing wiselie, the subtle doynges of Chrysogonus and Stalenus.

Tit. Liuius in Orat. Minutij. Lib. 22.

Now, which of all these source, Sophocles, S. Basil, Cicero, or Livie, hath expressed Hesiodus best, the indgement is as hard, as the workemanship of everie one is most excellent in deede. An other example out of the Latin tong also I will recite, for the worthines of the workeman therof, and that is Horace, who hath so turned the begynning of Terence Eunuchus, as doth worke in me, a pleasant admiration, as oft so ever, as I compare those two places togither. And though everie Master, and everie good Scholer to, do know the places, both in Terence and Horace, yet I will set them heare, in one place togither, that with more pleasure, they may be compared together.

This exercise may bring moch profite to ripe heads, and ftayd iudgementes: bicaufe in traueling in it, the mynde must nedes be verie attentiue, and busilie occupied, in turning and tossing it selfe many wayes: and conferryng with great pleasure, the varietie of worthie wittes and iudgementes togither: But this harme may sone cum therby, and namelie to yong Scholers, lesse, in seeking other wordes, and new forme of fentences, they chance vpon the worse: for the which onelie cause, Cicero thinketh this exercise not to be fit for yong men.

Epitome.

This is a way of studie, belonging, rather to matter, than to wordes: to memorie, than to vtterance: to those that be learned alreadie, and hath small place at all amonges yong scholers in Grammer scholes. It may proffet privately some learned men, but it hath hurt generallie learning it selfe, very moch. For by it have we lost whole Trogus, the best part of T. Livius, the goodlie Dictionarie of Pompeius sessus, a great deale of the Civill lawe, and other many notable bookes, for the which cause, I do the more mislike this exercise, both in old and yong.

Epitome, is good privatelie for himselse that doth worke it, but ill commonlie for all other that vse other mens labor therein: a silie poore kinde of studie, not vnlike to the doing of those poore solke, which neyther till, nor sowe, nor reape themselves, but gleane by stelth, vpon other mens growndes. Soch haue emptie barnes, for deare yeares.

Grammar scholes haue fewe Epitomes to hurt them, except Epitheta Textoris, and fuch beggarlie gatheringes, as Horman, Whittington, and other like vulgares for making of latines: yea I do wishe, that all rules for yong scholers, were shorter than they be. For without doute, Grammatica it selfe, is sooner and surer learned by examples of good authors, than by the naked rewles of Grammarians. Epitome hurteth more, in the vniuersities and studie of Philosophie: but most of all, in divinitie it selfe.

In deede bookes of common places be verie neceffarie, to induce a man, into an orderlie generall knowledge, how to referre orderlie all that he readeth, ad certa rerum Capita, and not wander in studie. And to that end did P. Lombardus the master of sentences and Ph. Melancthon in our daies, write two notable bookes of common places.

But to dwell in Epitomes and bookes of common places, and not to binde himfelfe dailie by orderlie fludie, to reade with all diligence, principallie the holyest scripture and withall, the best Doctors, and so to learne to make trewe difference betwixt, the authoritie of the one, and the Counsell of the other, maketh so many seeming, and sonburnt ministers as we haue, whose learning is gotten in a sommer heat, and washed away, with a Christmas snow againe: who neuerthelesse, are lesse to be blamed, than those blind bussardes, who in late yeares, of wilfull maliciousnes, would neyther learne themselues, nor could teach others, any thing at all.

Paraphrasis hath done lesse hurt to learning, than Epitome: for no Paraphrasis, though there be many, shall neuer take away Dauids Psalter. Erasmus Paraphrasis being neuer so good, shall neuer banishe the New Testament. And in an other schole, the Paraphrasis of Brocardus, or Sambucus, shal neuer take Aristotles Rhetoricke, nor Horace de Arte Poetica, out of learned mens handes.

But, as concerning a fchole Epitome, he that wo[u]ld haue an example of it, let him read Lucian $\pi\epsilon\rho i \kappa a\lambda\lambda ovs$ which is the verie Epitome of Ifocrates oration de laudibus Helenæ, whereby he may learne, at the leaft, this wife leffon, that a man ought to beware, to be ouer bold, in altering an excellent mans worke.

Neuertheles, some kinde of Epitome may be vsed, by men of skilful iudgement, to the great proffet also of others. As if a wise man would take Halles C[h]ronicle, where moch good matter is quite marde with Indenture Englishe, and first change, strange and inkhorne tearmes into proper, and commonlie vsed wordes: next, specially to wede out that, that is superfluous and idle, not onelie where wordes be vainlie heaped one vpon an other, but also where many sentences, of one meaning, be so clowted vp together as though M. Hall had bene, not writing the storie of England, but varying a fentence in Hitching schole: surelie a wise learned man, by this way of Epitome, in cutting away wordes and sentences, and diminishing nothing at all of the matter, shold leave to mens vse, a storie, halfe as moch as it was in quantitie, but twife as good as it was, both for pleafure and also commoditie.

An other kinde of Epitome may be vsed likewise very well, to moch prosset. Som man either by lustines of nature, or brought by ill teaching, to a wrong iudgement, is ouer full of words, [and] sentences, and matter, and yet all his words be proper, apt and well chosen: all his sentences be round and trimlie framed: his whole matter grownded vpon good reason, and stuffed with full arguments, for this intent and purpose. Yet when his talke shalbe heard, or his writing be re[a]d, of soch one, as is, either of my two dearest friendes, M. Haddon at home, or Iohn Sturmius in Germanie, that Nimium in him, which sooles and vnlearned will most commend, shall eyther of thies two, bite his lippe, or shake his heade at it.

This fulnes as it is not to be misliked in a yong man, fo in farder aige, in greater skill, and weightier affaires, it is to be temperated, or else discretion and iudgement shall seeme to be wanting in him. But if his stile be still ouer rancke and lustie, as some men being neuer so old and spent by yeares, will still be full of youthfull conditions as was Syr F. Bryan, and euermore wold have bene, soch a rancke and sull writer, must vse, if he will do wiselie the exercise of a verie good kinde of Epitome, and do, as certaine wise men do, that be ouer fat and slessie: who leaving their owne sull and plentifull table, go to soiorne abrode from home for a while, at the temperate diet of some sober man, and so by litle and litle, cut away the grofnesse that is in them. As for an example: If Oforius would leave of his lustines in striuing against S. Austen, and his ouer rancke rayling against poore Luther, and the troth of Gods doctrine. and give his whole studie, not to write any thing of his owne for a while, but to translate Demosthenes, with fo straite, fait, and temperate a style in latine, as he is in Greeke, he would becume so persit and pure a writer, I beleue, as hath be ene fewe or none fence Ciceroes dayes: And fo, by doing himfelf and all learned moch good, do others lesse harme, and Christes doctrine lesse iniury, than he doth: and with all, wyn vnto himfelfe many worthy frends, who agreing with him gladly, in ye loue and liking of excellent learning, are forie to fee so worthie a witte, so rare eloquence, wholie spent and confumed, in ftriuing with God and good men.

Emonges the rest, no man doth lament him more than I, not onelie for the excellent learning that I fee in him, but also bicaufe there hath passed privatelie betwixt him and me, fure tokens of moch good will, and frendlie opinion, the one toward the other. And furelie the distance betwixt London and Lysbon, should not stoppe, any kinde of frendlie dewtie, that I could, eyther shew to him, or do to his, if the greatest matter of all did not in certeyne pointes, feparate our myndes.

And yet for my parte, both toward him, and diuerfe others here at home, for like cause of excellent learning, great wisdome, and gentle humanitie, which I haue feene in them, and felt at their handes my felfe, where the matter of difference is mere confcience in a quiet minde inwardlie, and not contentious malice with fpitefull rayling openlie, I can be content to followe this rewle, in misliking some one thing, not to hate for anie thing els.

But as for all the bloodie beaftes, as that fat Boore of the wood: or those brauling Bulles of Bafan: or any lurking Dorm o us, blinde, not by nature, but by malice, and as may be gathered of their owne testimonie, giuen ouer to blindnes, for giuing ouer God and his word; or foch as be so lustie runnegates, as first, runne from God and his trew doctrine, than, from their Lordes, Masters, and all dewtie, next, from them selues and out of their wittes, lastly from their Prince, contrey, and all dew allegeance, whether they ought rather to be pitied of good men, for their miserie, or contemned of wise men, for their malicious solie, let good and wise men determine.

And to returne to Epitome agayne, fome will iudge moch boldnes in me, thus to iudge of Oforius ftyle: but wife men do know, that meane lookers on, may trewelie fay, for a well made Picture: This face had bene more cumlie, if that hie redde in the cheeke, were fomwhat more pure fanguin than it is: and yet the stander by, can not amend it himselfe by any way.

And this is not written to the dispraise but to the great commendation of Oforius, because Tullie himselfe had the same sulnes in him: and therefore went to Rodes to cut it away: and faith himselfe, recepi me domum prope mutatus, nam quasi referuerat iam oratio. Which was brought to passe I beleue, not onelie by the teaching of Molo Appollomius but also by a good way of Epitome, in binding him selfe to translate meros Atticos Oratores, and so to bring his style, from all lowse grosnesse, to soch firme fastnes in latin, as is in Demosthenes in Greeke. And this to be most trew, may easelie be gathered, not onelie of L. Crassus talke in 1. de Or. but speciallie of Ciceroes owne deede in translating Demosthenes and Æschines orations περί στεφ. to that verie ende and purpose.

And although a man growndlie learned all readie, may take moch proffet him felfe in ving, by Epitome, to draw other mens workes for his owne memorie fake, into shorter rowme, as Conterus hath done verie well the whole Metamorphofis of Ouid, and Dauid Cythræus a great deale better, the ix. Muses of Herodotus, and Melancthon in myne opinion, far best of all, the whole storie of Time, not onelie to his own vse, but to other mens proffet and hys great prayse, yet, Epitome is most necessarie of all in a mans owne writing, as we learned of that noble Poet Virgill, who, if Donatus say trewe, in writing that persite worke of the Georgickes, vsed dailie, when he had written 40. or 50. verses, not to cease cutting, paring, and pollishing of them, till he had brought them to the nomber of x. or xij.

And this exercife, is not more nedefullie done in a great worke, than wifelie done, in your common dailie writing, either of letter, or other thing elfe, that is to fay, to perufe diligentlie, and fee and spie wifelie, what is alwaies more then nedeth: For, twenty to one, offend more, in writing to moch, than to litle: euen as twentie to one, fall into sicknesse, rather by ouer mochfulnes, than by anie lacke or emptinesse. And therefore is he alwaies the best English Physition, that best can geue a purgation, that is, by way of Epitome, to cut all ouer much away. And surelie mens bodies, be not more full of ill humors, than commonlie mens myndes (if they be yong, luttie, proude, like and loue them selues well, as most men do) be full of san[ta]sies, opinions, errors, and faultes, not onelie in inward invention, but also in all their vtterance, either by pen or taulke.

And of all other men, even those that have ye inventiues theades, for all purposes, and roundest tonges in all matters and places (except they learne and vse this good lesson of Epitome) commit commonlie greater faultes, than dull, staying silent men do. For, quicke inventors, and faire readie speakers, being boldned with their present habilitie to say more, and perchance better to, at the soden for that present, than any other can do, vse lesse helpe of diligence and studie than they ought to do: and so have in them commonlie, lesse learning, and weaker iudgement, for all deepe considerations, than some duller heades, and slower tonges

And therefore, readie speakers, generallie be not the best, playnest, and wisest writers, nor yet the deepest iudgers in weightie affaires, bicause they do not tarry to weye and judge all thinges, as they should: but having their heades ouer full of matter, be like pennes ouer full of incke, which will foner blotte, than make any faire letter at all. Tyme was, whan I had experience of two Ambassadors in one place, the one of a hote head to inuent, and of a hastie hand to write, the other, colde and flayd in both: but what difference of their doinges was made by wife men, is not vnknowne to fome persons. The Bishop of Winchester Steph. Gardiner had a quicke head, and a readie tong, and yet was not the best writer in England. Cicero in Brutus doth wiselie note the same in Serg: Galbo, and Q. Hortentius, who were both, hote, lustie, and plaine speakers, but colde, lowfe, and rough writers: And Tullie telleth the caufe why, faying, whan they spake, their tong was naturally caried with full tyde and wynde of their witte: whan they wrote their head was folitarie, dull, and caulme, and fo their flyle was blonte, and their writing colde: Quod vitium, fayth Cicero, peringeniosis hominibus neque fatis doctis plerumque accidit.

And therfore all quick inventors, and readie faire speakers, must be carefull, that, to their goodnes of nature, they adde also in any wise, studie, labor, leafure, learning, and iudgement, and than they shall in deede, passe all other, as I know some do, in whome all those qualities are sullie planted, or else if they give over moch to their witte, and over litle to their labor and learning, they will sonest over reach in taulke, and sardest cum behinde in writing whatsoever they take in hand. The methode of Epitome is most necessarie for soch kinde of men. And thus much concerning the vieo or misuse of all kinde of Epitome in matters of learning.

* Imitatio.

Imitation, is a facultie to expresse liuelie and perfitelie that example: which ye go about to fol[l]ow. And of it felse, it is large and wide: for all the workes of nature, in a maner be examples for arte to folow.

But to our purpofe, all languages, both learned and mother tonges, be gotten, and gotten onelie by Imitation. For as ye vse to heare, so ye learne to speake: if ye heare no other, ye speake not your selfe: and whome ye onelie heare, of them ye onelie learne.

And therefore, if ye would speake as the best and wisest do, ye must be conversant, where the best and wisest are: but if yow be borne or brought vp in a rude co[u]ntrie, ye shall not chose but speake rudelie:

the rudest man of all knoweth this to be trewe.

Yet neuertheleffe, the rudenes of common and mother tonges, is no bar for wife fpeaking. For in the rudest contrie, and most barbarous mother language, many be found [yat] can speake verie wiselie: but in the Greeke and latin tong, the two onelie learned tonges, which be kept, not in common taulke, but in private bookes, we finde alwayes, wisdome and eloquence, good matter and good vtterance, neuer or seldom a sonder. For all soch Authors, as be fullest of good matter and right iudgement in doctrine, be likewise alwayes, most proper in wordes, most apte in sentence, most plaine and pure in vttering the same.

And contrariwife, in those two tonges, all writers, either in Religion, or any fect of Philosophie, who so euer be founde fonde in judgement of matter, be commonlie found as rude in vttering their mynde. For Stoickes, Anabaptistes, and Friers: with Epicures, Libertines and Monkes, being most like in learning and life, are no fonder and pernicious in their opinions, than they be rude and barbarous in their writinges. They be not wife, therefore that fay, what care I for a mans wordes and vtterance, if his matter and reasons be good. Soch men, fay fo, not fo moch of ignorance, as eyther of fome fingular pride in themselues, or some fpeciall malice or other, or for fome private and parciall matter, either in Religion or other kinde of learning. For good and choice meates, be no more requifite for helthie bodies, than proper and apte wordes be for good matters, and also plaine and sensible vtterance for the best and de[e]pest reasons: in which two pointes

standeth perfite eloquence, one of the fairest and rarest

giftes that God doth geue to man.

Ye know not, what hurt ye do to learning, that care not for wordes, but for matter, and fo make a deuorfe betwixt the tong and the hart. For marke all aiges: looke vpon the whole course of both the Greeke and Latin tonge, and ye shall furelie finde, that, whan apte and good wordes began to be neglected, and properties of those two tonges to be confounded, than also began; ill deedes to fpring: strange maners to oppresse good orders, newe and fond opinions to striue with olde and trewe doctrine, first in Philosophie: and after in Religion: right judgement of all thinges to be peruerted, and fo vertue with learning is contemned, and studie left of: of ill thoughtes cummeth peruerfe judgement: of ill deedes fpringeth lewde taulke. Which fower misorders, as they mar mans life, fo destroy they good learning withall.

But behold the goodnesse of Gods prouidence for learning: all olde authors and sectes of Philosophy, which were fondest in opinion, and rudest in vtterance, as Stoickes and Epicures, first contemned of wise men, and after forgotten of all men, be so consumed by tymes, as they be now, not onelie out of vse, but also out of memorie of man: which thing, I surelie thinke, will shortlie chance, to the whole doctrine and all the bookes of phantasticall Anabaptistes and Friers, and of the beaftlie Libertines and Monkes.

Againe behold on the other fide, how Gods wisdome hath wrought, that of Academici and Peripatetici, those that were wisest in iudgement of matters, and purest in vttering their myndes, the first and chiefest, that wrote most and best, in either tong, as Plato and Aristotle in Greeke, Tullie in Latin, be so either wholie, or sufficiently lest vnto vs, as I neuer knew yet scholer, that gaue himselfe to like, and loue, and solowe chiesie those three Authors but he proued, both learned, wise, and also an honest man, if he ioyned with all the trewe doctrine of Gods holie Bible, without the which, the other three, be but fine edge tooles in a fole or mad mans hand.

But to returne to Imitation agayne: There be three kindes of it in matters of learning.

The whole doctrine of Comedies and Tragedies, is a perfite imitation, or faire liuelie painted picture of the life of euerie degree of man. Of this Imitation writeth Plato at large in 3. de Rep. but it doth not moch belong at this time to our purpose.

The fecond kind of Imitation, is to folow for learning of tonges and fciences, the best authors. Here riseth, emonges proude and enuious wittes, a great controuers, whether, one or many are to be followed: and if one, who is that one: Seneca, or Cicero: Salust or Cæfar, and so forth in Greeke and Latin.

The third kinde of Imitation, belongeth to the fecond: as when you be determined, whether ye will folow one or mo, to know perfitlie, and which way to folow that one: in what place: by what meane and order: by what tooles and instrumentes ye shall do it, by what skill and iudgement, ye shall trewelie discerne, whether ye folow rightlie or no.

This Imitatio, is difsimilis materei similis tractatio: and also, similis materei dissimilis tractatio, as Virgill followed Homer: but the Argument to the one was Vlysses, to the other Æneas. Tullie persecuted Antonie with the same wepons of eloquence, that Demossthenes vsed before against Philippe.

Horace followeth Pindar, but either of them his owne Argument and Person: as the one, Hiero king of Sicilie, the other Augustus the Emperor: and yet both for like respectes, that is, for their coragious stoutnes in warre, and iust gouernment in peace.

One of the best examples, for right Imitation we lacke, and that is Menander, whom our Terence, (as the matter required) in like argument, in the same Persons, with equall eloquence, soote by soote did folow.

Som peeces remaine, like broken Iewelles, whereby men may rightlie esteme, and iustlie lament, the losse of the whole.

Erasmus, the ornament of learning, in our tyme, doth wish that fom man of learning and diligence, would take the like paines in Demosthenes and Tullie, that Macrobius hath done in Homer and Virgill, that is, to write out and ioyne together, where the one doth imitate the other. Erasmus wishe is good, but furelie, it is not good enough: for Macrobius gatherings for the Æneodos out of Homer, and Eobanus Heffus more diligent gatherings for the Bucolikes out of Theocritus, as they be not fullie taken out of the whole heape, as they should be, but even as though they had not fought for them of purpose, but found them fcatered here and there by chance in their way, euen fo, onelie to point out, and nakedlie to ioyne togither their fentences, with no farder declaring the maner and way, how the one doth folow the other, were but a colde helpe, to the encrease of learning.

But if a man would take his paine also, whan he hath layd two places, of Homer and Virgill, or of Demosthenes and Tullie togither, to teach plainlie withall, after this fort.

1. Tullie reteyneth thus moch of the matter, thies fentences, thies wordes:

2. This and that he leaueth out, which he doth wittelie to this end and purpofe.

3. This he addeth here.

4. This he diminisheth there.

5. This he ordereth thus, with placing that here, not there.

6. This he altereth, and changeth, either, in propertie of wordes, in forme of fentence, in fubstance of the matter, or in one, or other conuenient circumstance of the authors prefent purpose. In thies sewe rude English wordes, are wrapt vp all the necessarie tooles and instrumentes, where with trewe Imitation is rightlie wrought withall in any tonge. Which tooles, I openlie confesse, be not of myne owne forging, but partlie less vnto me by the cunningest Master, and one of the worthieft Ientlemen that euer England bred, Syr Iohn Cheke: partelie borowed by me out of the shoppe of the dearest frende I have out of England, Io. St. And therefore I am the bolder to borow of him, and here to leave them to other, and namelie to my Children: which tooles, if it please God, that an other day, they may be able to vse rightlie, as I do wish and daylie pray, they may do, I shal be more glad, than if I were able to leave them a great quantitie of land.

This forefaide order and doctrine of Imitation, would bring forth more learning, and breed vp trewer judgement, than any other exercise that can be vsed, but not for yong beginners, bicause they shall not be able to consider dulie therof. And trewelie, it may be a fhame to good studentes who having so faire examples to follow, as Plato and Tullie, do not vie fo wife wayes in following them for the obteyning of wisdome and learning, as rude ignorant Artificers do, for gayning a fmall commoditie. For furelie the meanest painter vseth more witte, better arte, greater diligence, in hys shoppe, in following the Picture of any meane mans face, than commonlie the best studentes do, euen in the vniuerlitie, for the atteining of learning it felfe.

Some ignorant, vnlearned, and idle student: or some busie looker voon this litle poore booke, that hath neither will to do good him felfe, nor skill to judge right of others, but can lustelie contemne, by pride and ignorance, all painfull diligence and right order in fludy, will perchance fay, that I am to precife, to curious, in marking and piteling [pidling] thus about the imitation of others: and that the olde worthie Authors did neuer busie their heades and wittes, in following fo precifelie, either the matter what other men wrote, or els the maner how other men wrote. They will fay, it were a plaine flauerie, and iniurie to, to shakkle and tye a good witte, and hinder the course of a mans good nature with such bondes of feruitude, in following other.

Except foch men thinke them felues wifer then

Cicero for teaching of eloquence, they must be content to turne a new lease.

The best booke that euer Tullie wrote, by all mens iudgement, and by his owne testimonie to, in wrytyng wherof, he employed most care, studie, learnyng and iudgement, is his booke de Orat. ad Q. F. Now let vs fee, what he did for the matter, and also for the maner of writing therof. For the whole booke confifteth in these two pointes onelie: In good matter, and good handling of the matter. And first, for the matter, it is whole Aristotles, what so euer Antonie in the fecond, and Craffus in the third doth teach. Trust not me, but beleue Tullie him felfe, who writeth fo, first, in that goodlie long Epistle ad P. Lentulum, and after in diverse places ad Atticum. And in the verie booke it felfe, Tullie will not haue it hidden, but both Catulus and Craffus do oft and pleasantly lay that stells to Antonius charge. Now, for the handling of the matter, was Tullie so precise and curious rather to follow an other mans Paterne, than to inuent fome newe shape him selfe, namelie in that booke, wherein he purposed, to leave to posteritie, the glorie of his witte? yea forsoth, that he did. And this is not my gessing and gathering, nor onelie performed by Tullie in verie deed, but vttered also by Tullie in plaine wordes: to teach other men thereby, what they should do, in taking like matter in hand.

And that which is especially to be marked, Tullie doth vtter plainlie his conceit and purpose therein, by the mouth of the wisest man in all that companie: for sayth Scauola him selfe, Cur non imitamur, Crasse.

Socratem illum, qui est in Phædro Platonis etc.

And furder to vnderstand, that Tullie did not obitet and bichance, but purposelie and mindfullie bend him selfe to a precise and curious Imitation of Plato, concernyng the shape and forme of those bookes, marke I pray you, how curious Tullie is to vtter his purpose and doyng therein, writing thus to Atticus.

Quod in his Oratorijs libris, quos tantopere laudas, personam desideras Scauola, non eam temere dimoui: Sed feci idem, quod in πολετεία Deus ille noster Plato, cum in Piræeum Socrates venifset ad Cephalum locupletem et festiuum Senem, quoad primus ille fermo haberetur, adest in disputando senex: Deinde, cum ipse quoque commodissime locutus effet, ad rem divinam dicit se velle discedere, neque postea revertitur. Credo Platonem vix putaffe fatis confonum fore, si hominem id ætatis in tam longo fermone diutius retinuisset: Multo ego satius hoc mihi cauendum putaui in Scauola, qui et atate et valetudine erat ea qua meministi, et his honoribus, vt vix fatis decorum videretur eum plures dies effe in Crafsi Tufculano. Et erat primi libri fermo non alienus à Scæuolæ studijs: reliqui libri τεχνολοσίαν habent, vt fcis. Huic ioculatoriæ difputationi fenem illum vt noras. interesse sanè nolui.

If Cicero had not opened him felfe, and declared hys owne thought and doynges herein, men that be idle, and ignorant, and enuious of other mens diligence and well doinges, would have fworne that Tullie had neuer mynded any foch thing, but that of a precife curiofitie, we fayne and forge and father foch thinges of Tullie, as he neuer ment in deed. I write this, not for nought: for I have heard fome both well learned, and otherwayes verie wife, that by their luftie misliking of foch diligence, haue drawen back the forwardnes of verie good wittes. But euen as fuch men them felues, do fometymes stumble vpon doyng well by chance and benefite of good witte, fo would I have our scholer alwayes able to do well by order of learnyng and right skill of judgement.

Concernyng Imitation, many learned men haue written, with moch diuersitie for the matter, and therfore with great contrarietie and fome stomacke amongest them felues. I have read as many as I could get diligentlie, and what I thinke of euerie one of them, I will freelie fay my mynde. With which freedome I trust good men will beare, bicause it shall tend to neither spitefull nor harmefull controuersie.

cicero. In Tullie, it is well touched, shortlie taught, not fullie declared by Ant. in 2. de Orat: and afterward in Orat. ad Brutum, for the liking and mifliking of Ifocrates: and the contrarie iudgement of Tullie agaynst Caluus, Brutus, and Calidius, de genere dicendi Attico et Asiatico.

Dio Halicar. Dionif. Halic. περὶ μιμήσεωs. I feare is loft: which Author next Aristotle, Plato, and Tullie, of all other, that write of eloquence, by the iudgement of them that be best learned, deserueth the next prayse and place.

Quintil. Quintilian writeth of it, shortly and coldlie for the matter, yet hotelie and spitefullie enough, agaynst the Imitation of Tullie.

Erasmus. Erasmus, beyng more occupied in fpying other mens faultes, than declaryng his owne aduise, is mistaken of many, to the great hurt of studie, for his authoritie sake. For he writeth rightlie, rightlie vnderstanded: he and Longolius onelie differing in this, that the one seemeth to give overmoch, the other over litle, to him, whom they both, best loved, and chiefly allowed of all other.

Budaus: Budaus in his Commentaries roughlie and obfcurelie, after his kinde of writyng: and for the matter, caryed fomewhat out of the way in ouermuch misliking the Imitation of Tullie.

Ph. Melanch.
Ioa. Camer.

Phil. Melancthon, learnedlie and trewlie.

Camerarius largely with a learned iudgement, but fumewhat confufedly, and with ouer rough a ftile.

Sambucus. Sambucus, largely, with a right iudgement but fomewhat a crooked stile.

Cortesius. Other haue written also, as Cortesius to P. Bembus. Politian, and that verie well: Bembus ad Ioan Sturmius. Picum a great deale better, but Ioan. Sturmius de Nobilitate literata, et de Amissa dicendiratione, farre best of all, in myne opinion, that euer tooke this matter in hand. For all the rest, declare chiefly this point, whether one, or many, or all, are to be followed: but Sturmius onelie hath most learnedlie declared, who is to be followed, what is to be followed, and the best point of all, by what way and order, trew Imitation is rightlie to be exercised. And although Sturmius herein doth farre passe all other, yet hath he not fo fullie and perfitelie done it, as I do wishe he had, and as I know he could. For though he hath done it perfitelie for precept, yet hath he not done it perfitelie enough for example: which he did, neither for lacke of skill, nor by negligence, but of purpofe, contented with one or two examples, bicaufe he was mynded in those two bookes, to write of it both shortlie, and also had to touch other matters.

Barthol. Riccius Ferrariensis also hath written learnedlie, diligentlie and verie largelie of this matter euen as hee did before verie well de Apparatu linguæ Lat. He writeth the better in myne opinion, bicause his whole doctrine, iudgement, and order, semeth to be borowed out of Io. Stur. bookes. He addeth also examples, the best kinde of teaching: wherein he doth well, but not well enough: in deede, he committeth no faulte, but yet, deserueth small praise. He is content with the meane, and solloweth not the best: as a man, that would feede vpon Acornes, whan he may eate, as good cheape, the finest wheat bread. He teacheth for example, where and how, two or three late Italian Poetes do follow Virgil: and how Virgil him felfe in the storie of Dido, doth wholie Imitate Catullus in the like matter of Ariadna: Wherein I like better his diligence and order of teaching, than his judgement in choice of examples for Imitation. But, if he had done thus: if he had declared where and how, how oft and how many wayes Virgil doth folow Homer, as for example the comming of Vlyffes to Alcynous and Calypso, with the comming of Æneas to Cart hage and Dido: Likewise the games running, wreftling, and shoting, that Achilles maketh in Homer, with the felfe fame games, that Æneas maketh in Virgil: The harnesse of Achilles, with the harnesse of Eneas, and the maner of making of them both by Vulcane: The notable combate betwixt Achilles and Hector, with as notable a combate betwixt Æneas and The going downe to hell of Vlyffes in Homer, with the going downe to hell of Æneas in Virgil: and other places infinite mo, as fimilitudes, narrations, messages, discriptions of persons, places. battels, tempestes, shipwrackes, and common places for diverse purposes, which be as precisely taken out of Homer, as euer did Painter in London follow the picture of any faire personage. And when thies places had bene gathered together by this way of diligence than to have conferred them together by this order of teaching, as, diligently to marke what is kept and vsed in either author, in wordes, in fentences. in matter: what is added: what is left out: what ordered otherwise, either præponendo, interponendo, or postponendo: And what is altered for any respect, in word, phrase, sentence, figure, reason, argument, or by any way of circumstance: If Riccius had done this, he had not onely bene well liked, for his diligence in teaching, but also iustlie commended for his right iudgement in right choice of examples for the best Imitation.

Riccius also for Imitation of prose declareth where and how Longolius doth folow Tullie, but as for Longolius, I would not have him the patern of our Imitation. In deede: in Longolius shoppe, be proper and faire shewing colers, but as for shape, sigure, and naturall cumlines, by the judgement of best judging artificers, he is rather allowed as one to be borne withall, than especially commended, as one chieflie to be folowed.

If Riccius had taken for his examples, where Tullie him felfe followeth either Plato or Demosthenes, he had thot than at the right marke. But to excuse Riccius, fomwhat, though I can not fullie defend him, it may be sayd, his purpose was, to teach onelie the Latin tong, when thys way that I do wish, to ioyne Virgii with Homer, to read Tullie with Demosthenes and Plato, requireth a cunning and perfite Master in both the tonges. It is my wish in deede, and that by good reason: For who so ever will write well of any matter, must labor to expresse that, that is perfite, and not to stay and content himselfe with the meane: yea, I say farder, though it not be vnposible, yet it is verie rare. and maruelous hard, to prove excellent in the Latin tong, for him that is not also well seene in the Greeke tong. Tullie him selfe, most excellent of nature, most diligent in labor, brought vp from his cradle, in that place, and in that tyme, where and whan the Latin tong most slorished naturallie in every mans mouth, yet was not his owne tong able it selfe to make him so cunning in his owne tong, as he was in deede: but the knowledge and Imitation of the Greeke tong withall.

This he confesseth himselfe: this he vttereth in many places, as those can tell best, that vse to read him most.

Therefore thou, that shotest at perfection in the Latin tong, think not thy selfe wiser than Tullie was, in choice of the way, that leadeth rightlie to the same: thinke not thy witte better than Tullies was, as though that may serve thee that was not sufficient for him. For even as a hauke slieth not hie with one wing: even so a man reacheth not to excellency with one tong.

I have bene a looker on in the Cokpit of learning thies many yeares: And one Cock onelie haue I knowne. which with one wing, euen at this day, doth passe all other, in myne opinion, that euer I faw in any pitte in England, though they had two winges. Yet neuerthelesse, to flie well with one wing, to runne fast with one leg, be rather, rare Maistreis moch to be merueled at, than fure examples fafelie to be followed. A Bushop that now liueth, a good man, whose iudgement in Religion I better like, than his opinion in perfitnes in other learning, faid once vnto me: we have no nede now of the Greeke tong, when all thinges be translated into Latin. But the good man vnderstood not, that euen the best translation, is, for mere necessitie, but an euill imped wing to flie withall, or a heuie stompe leg of wood to go withall: foch, the hier they flie, the fooner they falter and faill: the faster they runne, the ofter they stumble, and forer they fall. Soch as will nedes fo slie, may flie at a Pye, and catch a Dawe: And foch runners, as commonlie, they shoue and sholder to stand formost, yet in the end they cum behind others and deserve but the hopshakles, if the Masters of the game be right judgers.

Therefore in perusing thus, so many diverse bookes for Imitation, it came into my head that a verie profitable booke might be made de Imitatione, after an other fort, than ever yet was attempted of that matter, conteyning a certaine sewe sitte preceptes, vnto the which shoulde be gathered and applied plentie of examples, out of the choisest authors of both the tonges. This worke would stand rather in good diligence, for the gathering, and right iudgement for the apte applying of those examples: than any great learning or vtterance at all.

The doing thereof, would be more pleafant, than painfull, and would bring also moch proffet to all that should read it, and great praise to him would take it in hand, with iust defert of thankes.

Erasmus order all Authors Greke and Latin, seemeth to have prescribed to him selfe this order of readyng: that is, to note out by the way, three special pointes: All Adagies, all similitudes, and all wittie sayinges of most notable personages: And so, by one labour, he left to posteritie, three notable bookes, and namelie two his Chiliades, Apophthegmata, and Similia. Likewise, if a good student would bend him selfe to read diligently ouer Tullie, and with him also at the same tyme, Plato. as diligently Plato, and Xenophon, with Xenophon. his bookes of Philosophie, Ifocrates, Demosth. Aristotles. Aristotle with his Rhetorickes: which fine of all other, be those, whom Tullie best loued, and specially followed: and would marke diligently in Tullie, where he doth exprimere or effingere (which be the verie proper wordes of Imitation) either, Copiam Platonis or venustatem Xenophontis, fuauitatem Isocratis, or vim Demosthenes, propriam et puram subtilitatem Aristotelis, and not onelie write out the places diligentlie, and lay them together orderlie, but also to conferre them with skilfull iudgement by those sew rules, which I have expressed now twise before: if that diligence were taken, if that order were vsed, what perfite knowledge of both the tonges, what readie and pithie vtterance in all matters, what right and deepe iudgement in all kinde of learnyng would follow, is scarse credible to be beleued.

These bookes, be not many, nor long, nor rude in speach, nor meane in matter, but next the Maiestie of Gods holie word, most worthie for a man, the louer of learning and honestie, to spend his life in. Yea, I have heard worthie M. Cheke many tymes say: I would have a good student passe and iorney through all Authors both Greke and Latin: but he that will dwell in these sew bookes onelie: first, in Gods holie Bible, and than ioyne with it, Tullie in Latin, Plato, Aristotle: Xenophon. Isocrates: and Demosthenes in Greke: must nedes proue an excellent man.

Some men alreadle in our dayes, haue put to their helping handes, to this worke of Imitation. Perionus. As Perionius, Henr. Stephanus in dictionario H. Steph. Ciceroniano, and P. Victorius most praise- P. Victorius. worthelie of all, in that his learned worke conteyning

xxv. bookes de varia lectione: in which bookes be joyned diligentlie together the best Authors of both the tonges where one doth feeme to imitate an other.

But all these, with Macrobius, Heffus, and other, be no more but common porters, caryers, and bringers of matter and stuffe togither. They order nothing: They laye before you, what is done: they do not teach you, how it is done: They busie not them selues with forme of buildyng: They do not declare, this stuffe is thus framed by Demosthenes, and thus and thus by Tullie, and so likewise in Xenophon, Plato and Ifocrates and

Aristotle. For ioyning Virgil with Homer I have fufficientlie declared before.

Pindarus. The like diligence I would wish to be Horatius. taken in Pindar and Horace an equal match for all refpectes.

In Tragedies, (the goodliest Argument of all, and for the vse, either of a learned preacher, or a Ciuill Ientleman, more profitable than Homer, Pindar, Virgill, and Horace: yea comparable in myne opinion, with the docsophoeles. trine of Aristotle, Plato, and Xenophon,) the Euripides. Grecians, Sophoeles and Euripides far ouer Seneca. match our Seneca in Latin, namely in oikovopia et Decoro, although Senacaes elocution and verse be verie commendable for his tyme. And for the matters of Hercules, Thebes, Hippolytus, and Troie, his Imitation is to be gathered into the same booke, and to be tryed by the same touchstone, as is spoken before.

In histories, and namelie in Livie, the like diligence of Imitation, could bring excellent learning, and breede stayde judgement, in taking any like matter in hand. Onely Liuie were a fufficient taske for Tit. Liuius. one mans studie, to compare him, first with his fellow for all respectes, Dion. Halicarnassæus: who both, liued in one tyme: toke both one historie in hande to write: deferued both like prayse of learnynge and eloquence. Polybius that wife writer, whom Livie professeth to follow: and if he would denie it, yet it is plaine, that the best part of the thyrd Decade in Livie, is in a maner translated out of the thyrd and rest of Polibius: Lastlie with Thucydides, to whose Imita-Thucidides. tation Livie is curiouslie bent, as may well appeare by that one Oration of those of Campania. 1. Decad. asking aide of the Romanes agaynst the Samnites, which is wholie taken, Sentence, Reason, Argument, and order, out of the Oration of Corcyra, Thucid to asking like aide of the Athenienses against them of Corinth. If fome diligent student would take paynes to compare them togither, he should easelie perceiue, that I do fay trew. A booke, thus wholie filled with examples of Imitation, first out of Tullie, compared with Plato, Xenophon, Ifocrates, Demosthenes and Aristotle: than out of Virgil and Horace, with Homer and Pindar: next out of Seneca with Sophocles and Euripides: Lastlie out of Livie, with Thucvdides. Polibius and Halicarnaffaus, gathered with good dili gence, and compared with right order, as I have expressed before, were an other maner of worke for all kinde of learning, and namely for eloquence, than be those cold gatheringes of Macrobius, Heffus, Perionius, Stephanus, and Victorius, which may be vsed, as I sayd before, in this case, as porters and caryers, deserving like prayse, as soch men do wages; but onely Sturmius is he, out of whom, the trew furuey and whole workemanship is speciallie to be learned.

I trust, this my writyng shall give some good student occasion, to take some peece in hand of this worke of Imitation. And as I had rather have any opus de do it, than my felfe, yet furelie my felfe recta imitandi rather than none at all. And by Gods grace, if God do lend me life, with health, free layfure and libertie, with good likyng and a merie heart, I will turne the best part of my studie and tyme, to toyle in one or other peece of this worke of Imitation.

This diligence to gather examples, to give light and vnderstandyng to good preceptes, is no new inuention, but speciallie vsed of the best Authors and oldest writers. For Aristotle him selfe, (as Diog. Aristoteles. Laertius declareth) when he had written that goodlie booke of the Topickes, did gather out of stories and Orators, fo many examples as filled xv. bookes, onelie to expresse the rules of his Topickes. These were the Commentaries, that Aristotle thought fit for Commentaris hys Topickes: And therfore to speake as I thinke, I neuer saw yet any Commentarian Dialect. Aristotelis. tarie vpon Aristotles Logicke, either in Greke or Latin, that euer I lyked, bicause they be rather spent in declaryng scholepoynt rules, than in gather ing fit examples for vse and vtterance, either by pen or talke. For preceptes in all Authors, and namelie in Aristotle, without applying vnto them, the Imitation of examples, be hard, drie, and cold, and therfore barrayn, vnfruitfull and vnpleafant. But Aristotle, namelie in his Topickes and Elenches, should be, not onelie fruitfull, but also pleasant to, if examples out of Plato, and other good Authors, were diligentlie gathered, and aptlie applied vnto his most perfit preceptes there. And it is notable, that my frende Sturmius writeth herein, that there is no precept in Aristotles Topickes, wherof plentie of examples be not manifest in Platos workes. And I heare fay, that an excellent learned man, Tomitanus in Italie, hath expressed euerie fallacion in Aristotle, with diuerse examples out of Plato. Would to God, I might once fee, fome worthie student of Aristotle and Plato in Cambrige, that would iowne in one booke the preceptes of the one, with the examples of the other. For fuch a labor, were one speciall peece of that worke of Imitation, which I do wishe were gathered together in one Volume.

Cambrige, at my first comming thither, but not at my going away, committed this fault in reading the preceptes of Aristotle without the examples of other Authors: But herein, in my time thies men of worthie memorie, M. Redman, M. Cheke, M. Smith, M. Haddon, M. Watson, put so to their helping handes, as that vniuersitie, and all students there, as long as learning shall last, shall be bounde vnto them, if that trade in studie be trewlie solowed, which those men

By this fmall mention of Cambridge, I am caryed into three imaginations: first, into a sweete remembrance of my tyme spent there: than, into som carefull thoughts, for the greuous alteration that followed some after: lastlie, into much ioy to heare tell, of the good recouerie and earnest forwardnes in all good learning there agayne.

To vtter theis my thoughts fomwhat more largelie, were fomwhat befide my matter, yet not very farre out of the way, bycaufe it shall wholy tend to the good encoragement and right confideration of learning, which is my full purpose in writing this litle booke: whereby also shall well appeare this sentence to be most trewe, that onelie good men, by their gouernment and example, make happie times, in euery degree and state.

Doctor Nico. Medcalfe, that honorable D. Nic. father, was Mafter of S. Iohnes Colledge, Medcalf. when I came thether: A man meanelie learned himfelfe, but not meanely affectioned to fet forward learning in others. He found that Colledge fpending fcarfe two hundred markes by [the] yeare: he left it fpending a thousand markes and more. Which he procured, not with his mony, but by his wisdome; not chargeablie bought by him, but liberallie geuen by others by his meane, for the zeale and honor they bare to learning. And that which is worthy of memorie, all thies givers were almost Northenmen: who being liberallie rewarded in the service of their Prince, bestowed it as liberallie for the good of their Contrie. Som men thought therefore, that D. Medcalfe was parciall to Northrenmen, but fure I am of this, that Northrenmen were parciall, in doing more good, and geuing more landes to ye forderance of The parcialitie learning, than any other contrie men, of Northren in those dayes, did: which deede should colledge. haue beene, rather an example of goodnes, for other to folowe, than matter of malice, for any to enuie, as fome there were that did. Trewly, D. Med-calfe was parciall to none: but indifferent to all: a mafter for the whole, a father to euery one, in that Colledge. There was none fo poore, if he had, either wil in goodnes, or wit to learning, that could lacke being there, or should depart from thence, for any need. I am witnes my felfe, that mony many times was brought into yong mens studies by strangers whom they knew not. In which doing, this worthy Nicolaus followed the steppes of good olde S. Nicolaus, that learned Bishop. He was a Papist in deede, but would to God, amonges all vs Protestants I might once fee but one, that would winne like praise, in doing like good, for the aduauncement of learning and vertue. And yet, though he were a Papist, if any yong man, geuen to new learning (as they termed it) went beyond his fellowes, in witte, labor, and towardnes, euen the fame, neyther lacked, open praise to encorage him, nor private exhibition to mainteyne hym, as worthy Syr I. Cheke, if he were aliue would beare good witnes and fo can many mo. I my felfe one of the meanest of a great number, in that Colledge, because there appeared in me fom fmall shew of towardnes and diligence, lacked not his fauor to forder me in learning.

And being a boy, newe Bacheler of arte, I chanced amonges my companions to fpeake against the Pope: which matter was than in euery mans mouth, bycaufe D. Haines and D. Skippe were cum from the Court, to debate the same matter, by preaching and disputation in the vniuerfitie. This hapned the fame tyme, when I stoode to be felow there: my taulke came to D. Medcalfes eare: I was called before him and the Seniores: and after greuous rebuke, and fome punishment, open warning was geuen to all the felowes, none to be fo hardie to geue me his voice at that election. And yet for all those open threates, the good father himselfe priuilie procured, that I should euen than be chofen felow. But, the election being done, he made countinance of great discontentation thereat. good mans goodnes, and fatherlie discretion, vsed towardes me that one day, shall neuer out of my remembrance all the dayes of my life. And for the fame cause, haue I put it here, in this fmall record of learning. For next Gods prouidence, furely that day, was by that good fathers meanes, Dies natalis, to me. for the whole foundation of the poore learning I haue, and of all the furderance, that hetherto elfe where I haue obteyned.

This his goodnes stood not still in one or two, but flowed aboundantlie ouer all that Colledge, and brake out also to norishe good wittes in euery part of that vniuersitie: whereby, at this departing thence, he left foch a companie of fellowes and scholers in S. Iohnes Colledge, as can fcarfe be found now in fome whole vniuersitie: which, either for divinitie, on the one side or other, or for Ciuill feruice to their Prince and contrie, haue bene, and are yet to this day, notable ornaments to this whole Realme: Yea S. Johnes did then fo florish, as Trinitie college, that Princelie house now. at the first erection, was but Colonia deducta out of S. Iohnes, not onelie for their Master, fellowes, and scholers, but also, which is more, for their whole, both order of learning, and discipline of maners: and yet to this day, it neuer tooke Master but such as was bred vp before in S. Iohnes: doing the dewtie of a good Colonia to her Metropolis, as the auncient Cities of Grece and fome yet in Italie, at this day, are accustomed to do.

S. lohnes stoode in this state, vntill those heuie tymes, and that greuous change that chanced. An. 1553, whan mo perfite scholers were dispersed from thence in one moneth, than many yeares can reare vp againe. For, whan Aper de Sylua had Psal. 80. passed the seas, and fastned his soote againe in England, not onely the two faire groues of learning in England were eyther cut vp, by the roote, or troden downe to the ground and wholie went to wracke, but the yong fpring there, and euerie where elfe, was pitifullie nipt and ouertroden by very beastes, and also the fairest standers of all, were rooted vp, and cast into the fire, to the great weakening euen at this day of Christes Chirch in England, both for Religion and learning.

And what good could chance than to the vniuersities, whan fom of the greatest, though not of the wifest nor best learned, nor best men neither of that fide, did labor to perfwade, that ignorance was better than knowledge, which they ment, nor for the laitie onelie, but also for the greatest rable of their spiritualitie, what other pretense openlie so euer they made: and therefore did som of them at Cambrige (whom I will not name openlie,) cause hedge priestes fette oute of the contrie, to be made fellowes in the vniuersitie: saying, in their talke priuilie, and declaring by their deedes openlie, that he was, felow good enough for their tyme, if he could were a gowne and a tipet cunilie, and have hys crowne shorne faire and roundlie, and could turne his Portresse and pie readilie: whiche I fpeake not to reproue any order either of apparell, or other dewtie, that may be well and indifferentlie vsed, but to note the miferie of that time, whan the benefites prouided for learning were fo fowlie mifufed. And what was the frute of this feade? Verely, iudgement in doctrine was wholy altered: order in discipline very fore changed: the loue of good learning, began fodenly to wax cold: the knowledge of the tonges (in fpite of some that therein had florished) was manifeftly contemned: and fo, ye way of right studie purposely peruerted: the choice of good authors of mallice confownded. Olde sophistrie (I say not well) not olde, but that new rotten fophistrie began to beard and sholder logicke in her owne tong: yea, I know, that heades were cast together, and counfell deuifed, that Duns, with all the rable of barbarous questionistes, should have dispossessed of their place and rownes, Aristotle, Plato, Tullie, and Demosthenes, when good M. Redman, and those two worthy starres of that vniuersitie, M. Cheke, and M. Smith, with their fcholers, had brought to florishe as notable in Cam-Aristoteles. brige, as euer they did in Grece and in Italie: and for the doctrine of those fowre, the fowre pillers of learning, Cambrige than geuing place to no vniuersitie, neither in France, Spaine, Germanie, nor Italie. Also in outward behauiour, than began simplicitie in apparell, to be layd afide. Courtlie galantnes to be taken vp: frugalitie in diet was priuately misliked: Towne going Shoting. to good cheare openly vsed: honest pas times, ioyned with labor, left of in the fieldes: vnthrifty and idle games haunted corners, and occupied the nightes: contention in youth, no where for learning: factions in the elders euery where for trifles: All which miferies at length, by Gods prouidence, had their end 16. Novemb. 1558. Since which tyme, the yong fpring hath shot vp fo faire, as now there be in Cambrige againe, many goodly plantes (as did well appeare at the Queenes Maiesties late being there) which are like to grow to mightie great timber, to the honor of learning, and great good of their contrie, if they may stand their tyme, as the best plantes there were wont to do: and if fom old dotterell trees, with standing ouer nie them, and dropping vpon them, do not either hinder, or crooke their growing, wherein my feare is ye leffe, feing fo worthie a Iustice of an Oyre hath the prefent ouerlight of that whole chace, who was himfelfe fomtym, in the fairest spring that euer was there of learning, one of the forwardest yong plantes, in all that worthy College of S. Iohnes: who now by grace is growne to foch greatnesse, as, in the temperate and quiet shade of his wisdome, next the prouidence of God, and goodnes of one, in theis our daies, Religio for finceritie, literæ for order and aduauncement, Respub. for happie and quiet gouernment, haue to great rejoyfing of all good men, speciallie reposed them felues.

Now to returne to that Question, whether one, a few, many or all, are to be followed, my aunswere shalbe short: All, for him that is desirous to know all: yea, the worst of all, as Questionistes, and all the barbarous nation of scholemen, helpe for one or other consideration: But in euerie separate kinde of learning and studie, by it selfe, ye must sollow, choselie a few, and chieslie some one, and that namelie in our schole of eloquence, either for penne or talke. And as in portracture and paintyng wise men chose not that workman, that can onelie make a faire hand, or a well facioned legge, but soch [a] one, as can surnish vp fullie all the fetures of the whole body, of a man, woman and child: and with all is able to, by good skill, to giue to euerie one of these three, in their proper kinde, the right forme, the trew figure, the naturall color, that is fit and dew, to the dignitie of a man, to the bewtie of a woman, to the fweetnes of a yong babe: euen likewife, do we feeke foch one in our fchole to folow, who is able alwayes, in all matters, to teach plainlie, to delite pleasantlie, and to cary away by force of wife talke, all that shall heare or reade him; and is so excellent in deed, as witte is able, or wishe can hope, to attaine vnto: And this not onelie to ferue in the Latin or Greke tong, but also in our own English language. But yet, bicause the prouidence of God hath left vnto vs in no other tong, faue onelie in the Greke and Latin tong, the trew preceptes, and perfite examples of eloquence, therefore must we seeke in the Authors onelie of those two tonges, the trewe Paterne of Eloquence, if in any other mother tongue we looke to attaine, either to perfit vtterance of it our felues, or skilfull judgement of it in others.

And now to know, what Author doth medle onelie with fome one peece and member of eloquence, and who doth perfitelie make vp the whole bodie, I will declare, as I can call to remembrance the goodlie talke, that I haue had oftentymes, of the trew difference of Authors, with that Ientleman of worthie memorie, my dearest frend, and teacher of all the litle poore learning I haue, Syr Iohn Cheke.

The trew difference of Authors is best knowne, per diversa genera dicendi, that euerie one vsed. And therefore here I will deuide genus dicendi, not into these three, Tenuè, mediocrè, et grande, but as the matter of euerie Author requireth, as in Genus { Poeticum. Historicum. Philosophicum. Oratorium.

These differre one from an other, in choice of wordes, in framyng of Sentences, in handling of Argumentes, and vse of right forme, figure, and number, proper and fitte for euerie matter, and euerie one of these is diuerse also in it selfe, as the first.

Poeticum, in { Comicum. Tragicum. Epicum. Melicum.

And here, who foeuer hath bene diligent to read aduifedlie ouer, Terence, Seneca, Virgil, Horace, or els Aristophanus, Sophocles, Homer, and Pindar, and shall diligently marke the difference they vie, in proprietie of wordes, in forme of fentence, in handlyng of their matter, he shall easelie perceiue, what is sitte and decorum in euerie one, to the trew vie of perfite Imitation. Whan M. Watfon in S. Iohns College at Cambrige wrote his excellent Tragedie of Abfalon, M. Cheke, he and I, for that part of trew Imitation, had many pleafant talkes togither, in comparing the preceptes of Aristotle and Horace de Arte Poetica, with the examples of Euripides, Sophocles, and Seneca. Few men, in writyng of Tragedies in our dayes, haue shot at this marke. Some in England, moe in France, Germanie, and Italie, also have written Tragedies in our tyme: of the which, not one I am fure is able to abyde the trew touch of Aristotles preceptes, and Euripides examples, faue onely two, that euer I faw, M. Watfons Abfalon, and Georgius Buckananus Iephthe. One man in Cambrige, well liked of many, but best liked of him felfe, was many tymes bold and bufie, to bryng matters vpon flages, which he called Tragedies. In one, wherby he looked to wynne his fpurres, and whereat many ignorant felowes fast clapped their handes, he began the Protasis with Trochwijs Octonarijs: which kinde of verse, as it is but feldome and rare in Tragedies, so is it neuer vsed, saue onelie in Epitasi: whan the Tragedie is hieft and hotest, and full of greatest troubles. I remember ful well what M. Watfon merelie fayd vnto me of his blindnesse and boldnes in that behalfe although otherwife, there paffed much frendship betwene them. M. Watfon had an other maner [of] care of perfection, with a feare and reuerence of the judgement of the best learned: Who to this day would neuer suffer, yet his Abfalon to go abroad, and that onelie, bicaufe, in locis paribus, Anapestus is twife or thrife ysed in stede of Iambus. A fmal faulte, and fuch [a] one, as perchance would neuer be marked, no neither in Italie nor France. This I write, not fo much, to note the first, or praise the last, as to leave in memorie of writing, for good example to posteritie, what perfection, in any tyme, was, most diligentlie sought for in like maner, in all kinde of learnyng, in that most worthie College of S. Iohns in Cambrige.

For what proprietie in wordes, simplicitie in sentences, plainnesse and light, is cumelie for these kindes, Cæsar and Liuie, for the two last, are persite examples of Imitation: And for the two first, the old paternes be lost, and as for some that be present and of late tyme, they be sitter to be read once for some pleasure, than oft to be persued, for any good Imitation of them.

Oratorium in { Humile. Mediocre. Sublime.

Examples of these three, in the Greke tong, be plentifull and persite, as Lycias, Isocrates, and Demosthenes: and all three, in onelie Demosthenes, in diverse orations as contra Olimpiodorum, in Leptinem, et pro Ctesiphonte. And trew it is, that Hermogenes writeth of Demosthenes, that all formes of Eloquence be persite in him. In Ciceroes Orations, Medium et sublime be most excellentlie handled, but Humile in his Orations is seldome sene. Yet neverthelesse in other bookes, as in some part of his offices, and specially in Partitionibus, he is comparable in hoc humili et disciplinabili genere, even with the best that ever wrote in Greke. But of Cicero more sullie in sitter place. And thus, the trew difference of stiles, in everie Author, and everie kinde of learnyng may easelie be knowne by this division.

in Genus { Poeticum. Historicum. Philosophicum. Oratorium.

Which I thought in this place to touch onelie, not to profecute at large, bicaufe, God willyng, in the Latin tong, I will fullie handle it, in my booke de Imitatione.

Now, to touch more particularlie, which of those Authors, that be now most commonlie in mens handes, will fone affourd you some peece of Eloquence, and what maner a peece of eloquence, and what is to be liked and folowed, and what to be misliked and eschewed in them: and how some agayne will surnish you fully withall, rightly, and wisely considered, somewhat I will write as I have heard Syr Iohn Cheke many tymes say.

The Latin tong, concerning any part of purenesse of it, from the spring, to the decay of the same, did not endure moch longer, than is the life of a well aged man, fcarse one hundred yeares from the tyme of the last Scipio Africanus and Lælius, to the Empire of Augustus. And it is notable, that Vellius Paterculus writeth of Tullie, how that the perfection of eloquence did so remayne onelie in him and in his time, as before him, were sew, which might moch delight a man, or after him any, worthy admiration, but soch as Tullie might haue seene, and such as might haue seene Tullie. And good cause why: for no perfection is durable. Encrease hath a time, and decay likewise, but all persist ripenesse remaineth but a moment: as is plainly seen in fruits, plummes and cherries: but more sensibly in slowers, as Roses and such like, and yet as trewlie in all greater matters. For what naturallie, can go no hier, must naturallie yeld and stoupe againe.

Of this short tyme of any purenesse of the Latin tong, for the first fortie yeare of it, and all the tyme before, we have no peece of learning left, faue Plautus and Terence, with a litle rude vnperfit pamflet of the elder Cato. And as for Plautus, except the scholemaster be able to make wife and ware choice, first in proprietie of wordes, than in framing of Phrafes and fentences, and chieflie in choice of honestie of matter, your fcholer were better to play, then learne all that is in him. But furelie, if judgement for the tong, and direction for the maners, be wifely ioyned with the diligent reading of Plautus, than trewlie Plautus, for that purenesse of the Latin tong in Rome, whan Rome did most florish in wel doing, and fo thereby, in well fpeaking alfo, is foch a plentifull storeho [u]fe, for common eloquence, in meane matters, and all private mens affaires, as the Latin tong, for that refpect, hath not the like agayne. Whan I remember the worthy tyme of Rome, wherein Plautus did liue, I must nedes honor the talke of that tyme, which we fee Plautus doth vfe.

Terence is also a storehouse of the same tong, for an other tyme, following soone after, and although he be not so full and plentiful as Plautus is, for multitude of matters, and diversitie of wordes, yet his wordes, be chosen so purelie, placed so orderly, and all his stuffe fo neetlie packed vp, and wittely compassed in euerie place, as, by all wife mens iudgement, he is counted the cunninger workeman, and to haue his shop, for the rowme that is in it, more finely appointed, and trimlier ordered, than Plautus is.

Three thinges chiefly, both in Plautus and Terence, are to be specially considered. The matter, the vtterance, the words, the meter. The matter in both, is altogether within the compasse of the meanest mens maners, and doth not stretch to any thing of any great weight at all, but standeth chiefly in vtteryng the thoughtes and conditions of hard fathers, foolish mothers, vnthrifty yong men, craftie feruantes, fotle bawdes, and wilie harlots, and fo, is moch fpent, in finding out fine fetches, and packing vp pelting matters, foch as in London commonlie cum to the hearing of the Masters of Bridewell. Here is bale stuffe for that scholer, that should be cum hereaster, either a good minister in Religion, or a Ciuill Ientleman in seruice of his Prince and contrie: except the preacher do know foch matters to confute them, whan ignorance furelie in all foch thinges were better for a Ciuill Ientleman, than knowledge. And thus, for matter, both Plautus and Terence, be like meane painters, that worke by halfes, and be cunning onelie, in making the worst part of the picture, as if one were skilfull in painting the bodie of a naked perfon, from the nauell downward, but nothing elfe.

For word and speach, Plautus is more plentifull, and Terence more pure and proper: And for one respect, Terence is to be embraced aboue all that euer wrote in hys kinde of argument: Bicause it is well known, by good recorde of learning, and that by Ciceroes owne witnes that fome Comedies bearyng Terence name, were written by worthy Scipio, and wife Lælius, and namely Heauton: and Adelphi. And therefore as oft as I reade those Comedies, so oft doth sound in myne eare, the pure fine talke of Rome, which was vsed by the floure of the worthiest nobilitie that euer Rome bred. Let the wisest man, and best learned that liueth, read aduisedlie ouer, the first scene of Heauton, and the first scene of Adelphi, and let him consideratie iudge, whether it is the talke of a seruile stranger borne, or rather euen that milde eloquent wise speach, which Cicero in Brutus doth so liuely expresse in Lalius. And yet neuerthelesse, in all this good proprietie of wordes, and purenesse of phrases which be in Terence, ye must not follow him alwayes in placing of them, bicause for the meter sake, some wordes in him, somtyme, be driuen awrie, which require a straighter placing in plaine prose, if ye will forme, as I would ye should do, your speach and writing, to that excellent perstanesse, which was onely in Tullie, or onelie in Tullies tyme.

The meter and verse of Plautus and Terence be verie

The meter and verse of Plautus and Terence be verie meane, and not to be followed: which is not their reproch, but the fault of the tyme, wherein they wrote, whan no kinde of Poetrie, in the Latin tong, was brought to perfection, as doth well appeare in the fragmentes of Ennius, Cerilius, and others, and euiden[t]lie in Plautus and Terence, if thies in Latin be compared with right skil, with Homer, Euripides, Aristophanes, and other in Greeke of like fort. Cicero him selfe doth complaine of this vnpersitnes, but more plainly Quintilian, saying, in Comædia maximè claudicamus, et vix leuem consequimur vmbram: and most earnestly of all Horace in Arte Poetica, which he doth namely propter carmen Iambicum, and referreth all good studentes herein to the Imitation of the Greeke tong, faying.

Exemplaria Græca nocturna verfate manu, verfate diurna.

This matter maketh me gladly remember, my fweete tyme fpent at Cambrige, and the pleafant talke which I had oft with M. Cheke, and M. Watfon, of this fault, not onely in the olde Latin Poets, but also in our new English Rymers at this day. They wished as Virgil and Horace were not wedded to follow the faultes of former fathers (a shrewd mariage in greater matters) but by right Imitation of the perfit Grecians, had brought Poetrie to perfitnesse also in the Latin tong, that we Englishmen likewife would acknowledge and vnderstand rightfully our rude beggerly ryming, brought first into Italie by Gothes and Hunnes, whan all good verses and all good learning to, were destroyd by them: and after caryed into France and Germanie: and at last receiued into England by men of excellent wit in deede, but of fmall learning, and lesse iudgement in that behalfe.

But now, when men know the difference, and haue the examples, both of the best, and of the worst, furelie, to follow rather the Gothes in Ryming, than the Greekes in trew versifiyng, were euen to eate ackornes with fwyne, when we may freely eate wheate bread emonges men. In deede, Chaufer, Th. Norton, of Bristow, my L. of Surrey, M. Wiat, Th. Phaer, and other Ientleman, in translating Ouide, Palingenius and Seneca, haue gonne as farre to their great praife, as the copie they followed could cary them, but, if foch good wittes, and forward diligence, had bene directed to follow the best examples, and not have bene caryed by tyme and custome, to content themselues with that barbarous and rude Ryming, emonges their other worthy praifes, which they have justly deferued, this had not bene the least, to be counted emonges men of learning and skill, more like vnto the Grecians, than vnto the Gothians, in handling of their verfe.

In deed, our English tong, having in vse chiefly, wordes of one fyllable which commonly be long, doth not well receive the nature of Carmen Heroicum, bicaufe daclylus, the aptest soote for that verse, conteining one long and two short, is feldom therefore found in English: and doth also rather stumble than stand vpon Monafyllabis. Quintilian in hys learned Chapiter de Compositione, geueth this lesson

de Monasyllabis, before me: and in the same place doth iustlie inuey against all Ryming, if there be any, who be angrie with me, for misliking of Ryming, may be angry for company to, with Quintilian also, for the same thing: And yet Quintilian had not so iust cause to mislike of it than, as men haue at this day.

And although Carmen Exametrum doth rather trotte and hoble, than runne fmothly in our English tong, vet I am fure, our English tong will receive carmen Iambicum as naturallie, as either Greke or Latin. for ignorance, men can not like, and for idlenes, men will not labor, to cum to any perfitnes at all. For, as the worthie Poetes in Athens and Rome, were more carefull to fatiffie the judgement of one learned, than rashe in pleasing the humor of a rude multitude, euen fo if men in England now, had the like reuerend regard to learning skill and judgement, and durst not prefume to write, except they came with the like learnyng, and alfo did vse like diligence, in fearchyng out, not onelie iust measure in euerie meter, as euerie ignorant person may easely do, but also trew quantitie in euery foote and fillable, as onelie the learned shalbe able to do, and as the Grekes and Romanes were wont to do, furelie than rash ignorant heads, which now can eafely recken vp fourten fillabes, and eafelie stumble on euery Ryme, either durst not, for lacke of fuch learnyng: or els would not, in auoyding fuch labor, be fo bufie, as euerie where they be: and shoppes in London should not be so full of lewd and rude rymes, as commonlie they are. But now, the ripest of tonge, be readiest to write: And many dayly in setting out bookes and bal[1] ettes make great shew of blossomes and buddes, in whom is neither, roote of learning, nor frute of wisedome at all. Some that make Chaucer in English and Petrarch in Italian, their Gods in verses, and yet be not able to make trew difference, what is a fault, and what is a iust prayse, in those two worthie wittes, will moch mislike this my writyng. But such men be euen like followers of Chaucer and Petrarke, as one here in England did solow Syr Tho. More: who, being most vnlike vnto him, in wit and learnyng, neuertheles in wearing his gowne awrye vpon the one shoulder, as Syr Tho. More was wont to do, would nedes be counted lyke vnto him.

This mislikyng of Ryming, beginneth not now of any newfangle fingularitie, but hath bene long misliked of many, and that of men, of greatest learnyng, and deepest iudgement. And soch, that defend it, do so, either for lacke of knowledge what is best, or els of verie enuie, that any should performe that in learnyng, whereunto they, as I sayd before, either for ignorance, can not, or for idlenes will not, labor to attaine vnto.

And you that prayse this Ryming, bicause ye neither haue reason, why to like it, nor can shew learning to defend it, yet I will helpe you, with the authoritie of the oldest and learnedst tyme. In Grece, whan Poetrie was euen as the hiest pitch of persitnes, one Simmias Rhodius of a certaine singularitie wrote a booke in ryming Greke verses, naming it &do, conteyning the sable how Iupiter in likenes of a swan, gat that egge vpon Leda, whereof came Castor, Pollux and saire [H]elena. This booke was so liked, that it had sew to read it, but none to folow it: But was presentlie contemned: and sone after, both Author and booke, so forgotten by men, and consumed by tyme, as scarce the name of either is kept in memorie of learnyng: And the like solie was neuer solowed of any, many hondred yeares after vntill ye Hunnes and Gothians, and other barbarous nations, of ignorance and rude singularitie, did review the same solie agayne.

fingularitie, did reuiue the fame folie agayne.

The noble Lord Th. Earle of Surrey, The Earle of Surrey, Gonsaluo fourth booke of Virgill: and Gonfaluo Periz.

Periz that excellent learned man, and Secretarie to kyng Philip of Spaine, in translating the Vliffes of Homer out of Greke into Spanish, have both, by good indgement, anoyded the fault of Ryming, yet neither of them hath fullie hit[t]e perfite and trew versifying. In deed, they observe iust number, and even feete: but here is the fault, that their feete: be feete without iontes, that is to say, not distinct by trew quantitie of fillabes: And fo, foch feete, be but numme [benummed] feete: and be, euen as vnfitte for a verfe to turne and runne roundly withall, as feete of braffe or wood be vnweeldie to go well withall. And as a foote of wood, is a plaine shew of a manifest maime, euen so feete, in our English versifing, without quantitie and ioyntes, be sure signes, that the verse is either, borne deformed, vnnaturall and lame, and so verie vnseemlie to looke vpon, except to men that be gogle eyed them selues. The spying of this sault now is not the curiositie of

The fpying of this fault now is not the curiofitie of English eyes, but even the good iudgement also of the best that write in these dayes in Italie: and namelie sense Felice of that worthie Sensese Felice Figlincci, who, Figlincci. writyng vpon Aristotles Ethickes so excellentlie in Italian, as never did yet any one in myne opinion either in Greke or Latin, amongest other thynges doth most earnesslie invey agaynst the rude ryming of verses in that tong: And whan soever he expressed Aristotles preceptes, with any example, out of Homer or Euripides, he translateth them, not after the Rymes of Petrarke, but into soch kinde of persite verse, with like seete and quantitie of sillabes, as he found them before in the Greke tonge: exhortyng earnesslie all the Italian nation, to leave of their rude barbariousnesses in ryming, and solow diligently the excellent Greke and Latin examples, in trew versisyng.

And you, that be able to vnderstand no more, then ye finde in the Italian tong: and neuer went farder than the schole of Petrarke and Ariostus abroad, or els of Chaucer at home, though you haue pleasure to wander blindlie still in your soule wrong way, enuie not others, that seeke, as wise men haue done before them, the fairest and rightest way: or els, beside the instruction of malice, wisemen shall trewlie iudge, that you do so, as I haue sayd and say yet agayne vnto you, bicause, either, for idlenes ye will not, or for ignorance ye can not, cum by no better your felfe.

And therfore euen as Virgill and Horace' deserve most worthie prayse, that they spying the vnpersitnes in Ennius and Plautus, by trew Imitation of Homer and Euripides, brought Poetrie to the fame perfitnes in Latin, as it was in Greke, even fo those, that by the same way would benefite their tong and contrey, deserve rather thankes than disprayse in that behalfe.

And I reioyce, that even poore England prevented Italie, first in spying out, than in seekyng to amend this fault in learnyng.

And here, for my pleasure I purpose a litle, by the way, to play and sporte with my Master Tully: from whom commonlie I am neuer wont to dissent. He him selfe, for this point of learnyng, in his verses doth halt a litle by his leaue. He could not denie it, if he were aliue, nor those defend hym now that loue him best. This fault I lay to his charge: bicause once it pleased him, though somewhat merelie, yet oueruncurtessie, to rayle vpon poore England, objecting both, extreme beggerie, and mere barbariousness vnto it, writyng thus vnto his frend Atticus: There is not one scruple of siluer Ad Att. Lib. in that whole Isle, or any one that knoweth iv. Ep. 16. either learnyng or letter.

But now master Cicero, blessed be God, and his sonne Iesus Christ, whom you neuer knew, except it were as it pleased him to lighten you by some shadow, as couertlie in one place ye confesse saying: Veritatis tantum vmbram confectamur, as your Master Offic.

Plato did before you: bleffed be God, I fay, that fixten hundred yeare after you were dead and gone, it may trewly be fayd, that for filuer, there is more cumlie plate, in one Citie of England, than is in foure of the proudest Cities in all Italie, and take Rome for one of them. And for learnyng, beside the knowledge of all learned tongs and liberall sciences, euen your owne bookes Cicero, be as well read, and your excellent eloquence is as well liked and loued, and as trewlie folowed in England at this day, as it is now, or euer was, sence your owne tyme, in any place of Italie either at Arpinum, where ye were borne, or els at Rome where ye were brought vp. And a litle to brag with you Cicero, where you your felfe, by your leaue, halted in fome point of learnyng in your owne tong, many in England at this day go ftreight vp, both in trewe skill, and right doing therein.

This I write, not to reprehend Tullie, whom, aboue all other, I like and loue beft, but to excuse Terence, because in his tyme, and a good while after, Poetrie was neuer perfited in Latin, vntill by trew Imitation of the Grecians, it was at length brought to perfection: And also thereby to exhorte the goodlie wittes of England, which apte by nature, and willing by defire, geue them selues to Poetrie, that they, rightly vnderstanding the barbarous bringing in of Rymes, would labor, as Virgil and Horace did in Latin, to make perfit also this point of learning, in our English tong.

And thus much for Plautus and Terence, for matter, tong, and meter, what is to be followed, and what to be exchewed in them.

After Plautus and Terence, no writing remayneth vntill Tullies tyme, except a fewe fhort fragmentes of L. Craffus excellent wit, here and there recited of Cicero for example fake, whereby the louers of learnyng may the more lament the losse of foch a worthie witte.

And although the Latin tong did faire blome and bloffome in L. Craffus, and M. Antonius, yet in Tullies tyme onely, and in Tullie himfelfe chieflie, was the Latin tong fullie ripe, and growne to the hieft pitch of all perfection.

And yet in the fame tyme, it began to fade and stoupe, Tullie him felfe, in Brutus de Claris Oratoribus, with weeping wordes doth witnesse.

And bicaufe, emong[e]st them of that tyme, there was fome difference, good reason is, that of them of that tyme, should be made right choice also. And yet let the best Ciceronian in Italie read Tullies familiar epistles aduisedly ouer, and I beleue he shall sinde small difference, for the Latin tong, either in propriety of wordes or framing of the stile, betwixt Tullie, and those that write vnto him. As Ser. Sulpitius, A. Cecinna,

M. Calis, M. et D. Bruti, A. Pollia, L. Plancus, and diverse other: read the epistles of L. Plancus Epi. Planci x. in x. Lib. and for an affay, that Epistle lib. Epist. 8. namely to the Cornlff. and whole Senate, the eight Epistle in number, and what could be, eyther more eloquentlie, or more wifelie written, yea by Tullie himfelfe, a man may iustly doubt. Thies men and Tullie, lived all in one tyme, were like in authoritie, not vnlike in learning and studie, which might be iust causes of this their equalitie in writing: And yet furely, they neyther were in deed, nor yet were counted in mens opinions, equall with Tullie in that facultie. And how is the difference hid in his Epistles? verelie, as the cunning of an expert Seaman, in a faire calme fresh Ryuer, doth litle differ from the doing of a meaner workman therein, euen fo, in the short cut of a private letter, where, matter is common, wordes easie, and order not moch diverse, fmall shew of difference can appeare. But where Tullie doth fet vp his faile of eloquence, in fome broad deep Argument, caried with full tyde and winde, of his witte and learnyng, all other may rather fland and looke after him, than hope to ouertake him, what course fo euer he hold, either in faire or foule. Foure men onely whan the Latin tong was full ripe, be left vnto vs, who in that tyme did florish, and did leave to posteritie, the fruite of their witte and learning: Varro, Saluft, Cafar, and Cicero. Whan I fay, thefe foure onely, I am not ignorant, that euen in the fame tyme, most excellent Poetes, deferuing well of the Latin tong, as Lucretius, Catulius, Virgill, and Horace, did write: But, bicaufe, in this litle booke, I purpose to teach a yong scholer, to go, not to daunce: to fpeake, not to fing, (whan Poetes in deed, namelie Epici and Lyrici, as thefe be, are fine dauncers, and trime fingers,) but Oratores and Historici, be those cumlie goers, and faire and wife fpeakers, of whom I wishe my scholer to wayte vpon first, and after in good order, and dew tyme, to be brought forth, to the finging and dauncing schole: And for this confideration, do I name these foure, to he the onelie writers of that tyme.

¶ Varro.

Varro. Varro, in his bookes de lingua Latina, et Analogia as these be lest mangled and patched vnto vs, doth not enter there in to any great depth of eloquence, but as one caried in a small low vessell him selse verie nie the common shore, not much vnlike the sister men of Rye, and Hering men of Yarmouth. Who deserve by common mens opinion, small commendacion, for any cunning sa[y]ling at all, yet neuertheles in those bookes of Varro good and necessarie stuffe, for that meane kinde of Argument, be verie well and learnedlie

His bookes of Husbandrie, are moch to De Rep. be regarded, and diligentlie to be read, not Rustica. onelie for the proprietie, but also for the plentie of good wordes, in all contrey and husbandmens affaires: which can not be had, by fo good authoritie, out of any other Author, either of fo good a tyme, or of fo great learnyng, as out of Varro. And yet bicaufe, he was fourfcore yeare old, whan he wrote those bookes, the forme of his style there compared with Tullies writing, is but euen the talke of a spent old man: whose wordes commonlie fall out of his mouth, though verie wifelie, yet hardly and coldie, and more heauelie alfo, than fome eares can well beare, except onelie for age, and authorities fake. And perchance, in a rude contrey argument, of purpose and judgement, he rather vsed, the fpeach of the contrey, than talke of the Citie.

And fo, for matter fake, his wordes fometyme, be fomewhat rude: and by the imitation of the elder Cato, old and out of vse: And beyng depe stept in age, by negligence fome wordes do so [e]scape and fall from him in those bookes, as be not worth the taking vp, by him, that is carefull to speak or write trew Latin, as that Lib. 3. Cap. 1. fentence in him, Romani, in pace à rusticis alebantur, et in bello ab his tuebantur. A good student must be therfore carefull and diligent, to read with iudgement ouer euen those Authors, which did write in the most perfite tyme: and let him not be affrayd to trie them, both in proprietie of wordes, and forme of style, by the touch stone of Cafar and Cicero, whose puritie was neuer foiled, no not by the fentence of those. that loued them worft.

All louers of learnyng may fore lament the losse of those bookes of Varro, which he Warroes wrote in his yong and lustie yeares, with good leyfure, and great learning of all partes of Philosophie: of the goodliest argumentes, perteyning both to the common wealth, and private life of man, as, de Ratione studij, et educandis liberis, which booke, is oft recited, and moch prayled, in the fragmentes of Nonius, even for authoritie fake. He wrote most diligentlie and largelie, also the whole historie of the state of Rome: the mysteries of their whole Religion: their lawes, customes, and gouernement in peace: their maners, and whole discipline in warre: And this is not my gessing, as one in deed that neuer faw those bookes, but euen, the verie iudgement, and playne testimonie of Tullie him felfe, who knew and read those bookes, in these wordes: Tu atatem Patria: Tu descriptiones temporum: Tu facrorum, tu facerdotum Iura: Tu domesticam, tu bellicam disciplinam: Tu sedem Regionum, locorum, tu omnium divinarum humanarumque rerum In Acad. nomina, genera, officia, caufas aperuisti. etc. Quest

But this great loffe of Varro, is a litle recompensed by the happy comming of Dionysius Halicarnas sæus to Rome in Augustus dayes: who getting the possession of Varros librarie, out of that treasure house of learning, did leaue vnto vs fome frute of Varros witte and diligence, I meane, his goodlie bookes de Antiquitatibus Romanorum. Varro was fo estemed for his excellent learnyng, as Tullie him felfe had a reuerence to his iudgement in all dou[b]tes of learnyng. And Antonius Triumuir, his enemie, and of a contrarie Cic. ad Att. faction, who had power to kill and bannish whom he lifted, whan Varros name amongest others was brought in a schedule vnto him, to be noted to death, he tooke his penne and wrote his warrant of sauegard with these most goodlie wordes, Viuat Varro vir dostissimus. In later tyme, no man knew better: nor liked and loued more Varros learnyng, than did S. Augustine, as they do well vnderstand, that haue diligentlie read ouer his learned bookes de Ciuitate Dei: Where he hath this most notable sentence: Whan I see, how much Varro wrote, I meruell much, that euer he had any leasure to read: and whan I perceiue how many thinges he read, I meruell more, that euer he had any leasure to write. etc.

And furelie, if Varros bookes had remained to posteritie, as by Gods prouidence, the most part of Tullies did, than trewlie the Latin tong might have made good comparison with the Greke.

Saluste.

Salust, is a wife and worthy writer: but Salusi he requireth a learned Reader, and a right confiderer of him. My dearest frend, and best master that ever I had or heard in learning, Syr I. Cheke, foch Syr Iohn had or heard in learning, Syr I. Cheke, foch chekes iudgement and counsell for readyng breed the like againe, I feare, I should of Saluste. liue ouer long, did once giue me a lesson for Salust, which, as I shall never forget my felfe, fo is it worthy to be remembred of all those, that would cum to perfite judgement of the Latin tong. He faid, that Salust was not verie fitte for yong men, to learne out of him, the puritie of the Latin tong: because, he was not the purest in proprietie of wordes, nor choifest in aptnes of phrases, nor the best in framing of fentences: and therefore is his writing, fayd he neyther plaine for the matter, nor fensible for mens vnderstanding. And what is the cause thereof, Syr, quoth I. Verilie said he, bicause in Salust writing, is more Arte than nature, and more labor than Arte: and in his labor also, to moch toyle, as it were, with an vncontented care to write better than he could, a fault common to very many men. And therefore he doth not expresse the matter lively and naturally with common speach as ye see Xenophon doth in Greeke, but it is caried and driven forth artificiallie, after to learned a forte, as Thucydides, doth in his orations. And how cummeth it to passe, fayd I, that Cafar and Ciceroes talke, is fo naturall and plaine, and Salust writing fo artificiall and darke, whan all they three liued in one tyme? I will freelie tell you my fanfie herein, faid he: furely, Cæfar and Cicero, beside a fingular prerogative of naturall eloquence geven vnto them by God, both two, by vse of life, were daylie orators emonges the common people, and greatest councellers in the Senate house: and therefore gaue themselues to vse foch speach as the meanest should well vnderstand, and the wifest best allow: following carefullie that good councell of Aristotle, loquendum vt multi, fapiendum vt pauci. Salust was no foch man. neyther for will to goodnes, nor skill by learning: but ill geuen by nature, and made worfe by bringing vp, fpent the most part of his youth very misorderly in ryot and lechery. In the company of foch, who, neuer geuing theyr mynde to honest doyng, could neuer inure their tong to wife speaking. But at [ye] last cummyng to better yeares, and b[u]ying witte at the dearest hand, that is, by long experience of the hurt and shame that commeth of mischeif, moued, by the councell of them that were wife, and caried by the example of foch as were good, first fell to honestie of life, and after to the loue to studie and learning: and fo became so new a man, that Cæfar being dictator, made him Pretor in Numidia where he abfent from his contrie, and not inured with the common talke of Rome, but shut vp in his studie, and bent wholy to reading, did write the storie, of the Romanes. And for the better accomplishing of the fame, he re[a]d Cato and Pifo in Latin for gathering of matter and troth: and Thucydides in Greeke for the order of his storie, and furnishing of his

Cato (as his tyme required) had more troth for the matter, than eloquence for the style. Salust, by gathering troth out of Cato, fmelleth moch of the roughnes of his ftyle: euen as a man that eateth garlike for helth, shall cary away with him the fauor of it also, whether he will or not. And yet the vse of old wordes is not the greatest cause of Salustes [his] roughnes and darknesse: There be in Salust some old wordes in deed as patrare bellum, ductare exercitum, Lib. 8. Cap. 3. De Ornata. well noted by Quintilian, and verie much misliked of him: and supplicium for supplicatio, a word fmellyng of an older store, than the other two fo mifliked by Quint: And yet is that word also in Varro, speaking of Oxen thus, boues ad victimas faciunt, atque ad Deorum supplicia; and a few old wordes mo. Read Saluste and Tullie aduisedly together: and in wordes ye shall finde small difference: yea Salust is more geuen to new wordes, than to olde, though fom olde writers fay the contrarie: as Claritudo for Gloria: exacte for perfecte: Facundia for eloquentia. Thies two last wordes exacte and facundia now in euery mans mouth, be neuer (as I do remember) vsed of Tullie, and therefore I thinke they be not good: For furely Tullie speaking euery where fo moch of the matter of eloquence, would not fo precifely have absteyned from the word Facundia, if it had bene good: that is proper for the tong, and common for mens vie. I could be long, in reciting many foch like, both olde and new wordes in Salust: but in very dede neyther oldnes nor newnesse The cause why of wordes maketh the greatest difference Salust is not betwixt Salust and Tullie, but first strange phrases made of phrases made of good Latin wordes, but framed after the Greeke tonge, which be nevther choifly borowed of them, nor properly vsed by him: than, a hard composition and crooked framing of his wordes and fentences, as a man would fay, English talke placed and framed outlandish like. As for example first in phrases, nimius et animus be two vsed wordes, yet homo nimius animi, is an vnufed phrafe.

Vulgus, et amat, et fieri, be as common and well known wordes as may be in the Latin tong, yet id quod vulgò amat fieri, for folet fieri, is but a strange and grekysh kind of writing. Ingens et vires be proper wordes, yet vir ingens virium is an vnproper kinde of speaking and so be likewise, and many foch like phrases in Salust, borowed as I fayd not choisly out of Greeke, and vsed therefore vnproperlie in Latin. Againe, in whole fentences, where the matter is good, the wordes proper and plaine, yet the fenfe is hard and darke, and namely in his prefaces and oration[s], wherein he vied most labor, which fault. is likewife in Thucydides in Greeke, of whom Saluft hath taken the greatest part of his darkenesse. For Thucydides likewife wrote his storie, not at home in Grefelce, but abrode in Italie, and therefore fmelleth of a certaine outlandish kinde of talke, strange to them of Athens, and diverse from their writing, that lived in Athens and Gre[e]ce, and wrote the fame tyme that Thucydides did, as Lyfias, Xenophon, Plato, and Ifocrates, the purest and playnest writers, that euer wrote in any tong, and best examples for any man to follow whether he write, Latin, Italian, French, or English. Thucydides also semeth in his writing, not so much benefited by nature, as holpen by Arte, and caried forth by defire, studie, labor, toyle and ouer great curiofitie: who fpent xxvii. yeares in writing his eight bookes of his history. Salust likewife wrote out of his contrie, and followed the faultes of Thuc. to moch: and boroweth of him fom kinde of writing, which the Latin tong can not well beare, as Cafus nominativus in diverse places abfolute positus, as in that place of Iugurth, speaking de Leptitanis, itaque ab imperatore facile quæ petebant adepti, missæ funt ed cohortes Ligurum quatuor. This thing in participles, vfed fo oft in Thucyd[ides] and other Greeke authors to, may better be borne with all, but Saluft yfeth the fame more strangelie and boldlie, as in thies wordes, Multis sibi quisque imperium petentibus. beleue, the best Grammarien in England can scarfe giue a good reule, why quifque the nominatiue cafe, without any verbe, is fo thrust vp amongest so many oblique cases. Some man perchance will smile, and laugh to scorne this my writyng, and call it idle curiofitie, thus to busie my felfe in pickling about these fmall pointes of Grammer, not fitte for my age, place and calling, to trifle in: I trust that man, be he never so great in authoritie, neuer fo wife and learned, either, by other mens judgement, or his owne opinion, will yet thinke, that he is not greater in England, than Tullie was at Rome, not yet wifer, nor better learned than Tullie was him felfe, who, at the pitch of three score yeares, in the middes[t] of the broyle betwixt Cæsar and Pompeie, whan he knew not, whether to fend wife and children, which way to go, where to hide him felfe, yet, in an earnest letter, amongest his Ad. Att. Lib. 7. earnest councelles for those heuie tymes Epistola 3. concerning both the contrey, and his owne private great affaires he was neither vnmyndfull nor ashamed to reason at large, and learne gladlie of Atticus, a lesse point of Grammer than these be, noted of me in Salust, as, whether he would write, ad Piræea, in Piræea, or in Piræeum, or Piræeum fine præpositione: And in those heuie tymes, he was fo carefull to know this fmall point of Grammer, that he addeth these wordes Si hoc mihi ζήτημα perfolueris, magna me molestia liberaris. If Tullie, at that age, in that authoritie, in that care for his contrey, in that ieopardie for him felfe, and extreme necessitie of hys dearest frendes, beyng also the Prince of Eloquence hym felfe, was not ashamed to descend to these low pointes of Grammer, in his owne naturall tong, what should scholers do, yea what should any man do, if he do thinke well dovng, better than ill dovng: And had rather be, perfite than meane, fure than doubtefull, to be what he should be, in deed, not seeme what he is not, in opinion. He that maketh perfitnes in the Latin tong his marke, must cume to it by choice and certaine knowledge, not stumble vpon it by chance and doubtfull ignorance. And the right steppes to reach vnto it, be these, linked thus orderlie together, aptnes of nature, loue of learnyng, diligence in right order, constancie with pleasant moderation, and alwayes to learne of them that be best, and so shall you judge as they that be wifest. And these be those reules, which worthie Master Cheke dyd impart vnto me concernyng Saluss, and the right judgement of the Latin tong.

Cæfar for that litle of him, that is left vnto vs, is like the halfe face of a Venus, the other part of the head beyng hidden, the bodie and the rest of the members vnbegon, yet so excellentlie done by Apelles, as all men may stand still to mase and muse vpon it, and no man step forth with any hope to performe the like.

His feuen bookes de bello Gallico, and three de bello Civili be written, so wiselie for the matter, so eloquent-lie for the tong, that neither his greatest enemies could euer finde the least note of parcialitie in him (a meruelous wisdome of a man, namely writyng of his owne doynges) nor yet the best judgers of the Latin tong, nor the most enuious lookers vpon other mens writynges, can say any other, but all things be most persitelie done by him.

Brutus, Caluus, and Calidius, who found fault with Tullies fulnes in woordes and matter, and that rightlie, for Tullie did both, confesse it, and mend it, yet in Casar, they neither did, nor could finde the like, or any other fault.

And therfore thus iustlie I may conclude of Cafar,

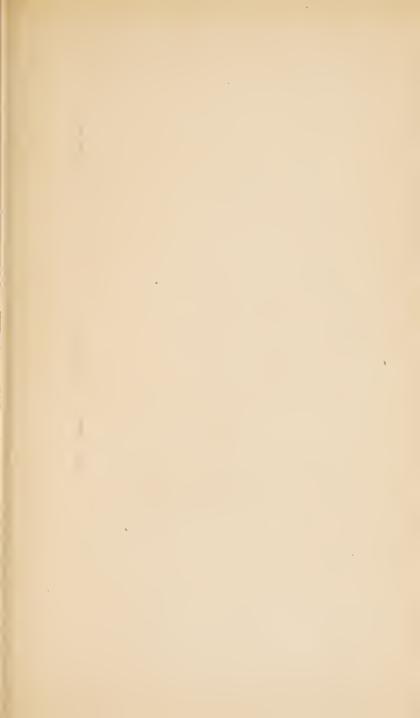

160 The ready way to the Latin tong.

that where, in all other, the best that euer wrote, in any tyme, or in any tong, in Greke and Latin, I except neither Plato, Demosthenes, nor Tullie, some fault is inflie noted, in Cæfar onelie, could neuer yet sault be found.

Yet neuertheles, for all this perfite excellencie in him, yet it is but in one member of eloquence, and that but of one fide neither, whan we must looke for that example to fol[l]ow, which hath a perfite head, a whole bodie, forward and backward, armes and legges and all.
